FBI probe 'leaks'

Top officials of the FBI and the U.S. attorney's office here improperly leaked damaging but unproved information linking public figures in Chicago and New York to corruption, knowing it would be printed, the Chicago Lawyer monthly charges today.

The Chicago Lawyer, an "independent" publication that scrutinizes the local legal scene, said the information was given to a writer for Miami/South Florida magazine in exchange for a nine-month delay in publication of his article on Michael Raymond, the alleged "mole" in the corruption probe involving public officials in the two cities and Systematic Recovery Service.

The leaked information did surface and "severely and adversely affected the rights of individual citizens who had not been convicted, or even formally accused, of any crime," the Chicago Lawyer editori-

alizes in its April issue. —
The Chicago Lawyer noted that the list of officials, "who have yet to be indicted (and some of whom may never be indicted)," included the name of Donald Manes, former borough president of Queens in New York. Manes committed gui-clde after stories containing the leaked material were printed.

The publication said Vincent J. Connelly, chief of the criminal divi-sion of the U.S. attorney's office here who has since been promoted to chief of the special prosecutions division, leaked the information during three visits to Miami and may have violated U.S. District Court and Justice Department rules by doing so. Chicago FBI chief Edward D. Hegarty set up the meetings, the publication said.

U.S. Attorney Anton R. Valukas, Councily's boss, declined to com-ment on the article. Valukas said he would respond "at the appropriate time." Hegarty also declined to respond "at this time."

Gaeton Fonzi, the writer, was probing the presumed murders of three Floridians when he discov-ered they all knew Raymond—alias George White and Michael Burnett—and that Raymond was a snitch in the Justice Department's Witness Protection Program.

Fonzi wanted information on Raymond's connection to the murders and whether he was being shielded by the government.

Instead, he was given "gratuitous" details of the corruption probes and told his article could endanger the investigation and Raymond's life, said Chicago Lawyer editor Rob Warden.

INCENT J. CONNELLY, a top assistant to U.S. Attorney Anton R. Publication of the article, which linked Raymond to the suspected murders of three Floridians and identified him as am FBI informant, was delayed nine months in return for information Connelly provided Fonzi was reluctant to discuss precisely Four was renetant to unscuss precisery what information Connelly gave him. However, F. Gilman Spencer, editor of the New York Daily News, who read Fourl's notes of his discussions with Connelly, told Chicago Lauyer.

"Vince Connelly was talking extremely candidly and informally. He gave specific dates and events. "The bureau figured out that if they a could leak the story just in terms of the torruption they could overshadow the background of Raymond." Form said.

Form add Connelly confirmed that the FBI was conducting Absenmition investing allons into bribery of officials in both Chicago and New York by Systematic Recovery Service, its president, Bernard Sandow, and an eruployee, Raymond, who also was an FBI mole.

This Justice Department rule may be waived at the discretion of the ottorney waived at the discretion of the ottorney general or deputy attorney general, and Fonzi said he assumed that the rule had been waived in this case. "Councily said he had to get clearance to contact me in the first place," said Fonzi.

Fonzi, senior writer et Miami/South Florida, said his iovolvement in the story began in 1994 when he set out to investigate the disappearance of a Fort Lauderdale socialite, Adelaide Ullian Stiles.

Fonzi soon discovered that Stiles's dissppearance shared a potentially signifi-cant element with the disappearance of two other Floridians, Max Hussard and Anne Sessa. All three knew a man known as Michael Burnett, an alies that the FBI had created for Michael Raymond.

Under the alias George White, Fonzi learned, Raymond had testified in 1971 before the U.S. Senate Fermanent Committee on investigations about his involvement in securities frauds running in-to the millions of dollars. When the New York Times revealed a few days after the For Jimes reveauce a new new Michael lestimony that White was really Michael Raymond, the Justice Department put him into its Witness Protection Program Michael and gave him a new identity - Michael Burnett.

But Fonzi said he was persistent. In ruid-February, he said, he called the FBI spokesman and said, "Let's go have a cup of colfee and I'll tel' you everything that's in my story." The spokesman listened and, according to Fonzi, said, "That's a damn good story." damn good story."

On Monday, February 25, 1985, said Fonti, Special Agent Hegarty arrived from Chicago. Fonsi said that at a meeting with him, the Miami FBI press meeting with him, the Miami FBI press spokerman, and the magazine's editorial board—comprising Erica Rauzin, editor, Rick Eyerdam, managing editor, and Sylvan Mayer, publisher—Hegarty seked that the April publication be postponed until July because disclosure of Raymond's involvement with the FBI could jeopardize "an important investigation is Chicago" and endanger the liver of Raymond and other undercover agents. At the meeting, and Fouzi, the editorial board agreed to withhold publication of the story until July with the understanding that Hegarty would provide something in return: He would arrange a "candid brief.

return: He would arrange a "candid brief-ing" for Ponzi by Connelly and would obtompt to answer specific questions that the magazine wanted answered.

Among the questions, scoording to managing editor Eyerdam, were:

* Did the FBI have any information proving that Raymond should not be a suspe the murders of Stiles, Bussard, and Bessa?

· Did the FBI know the fate of Stike, Bussard, and Sessa?

• Did the FBI prevent a bomicide investigation of Raymond because it felt his white collar cases were more important than while collar cases were more important than an investigation of three deaths?

* How much money had Raymond stolen while in the employ of the FBI?

* Would poreous swindled by Raymond be compensated by the FBI?

Eyerdam told Chicago Lawyer that There was a guneral consensus! that the delay was worth it to the magnitoo because the information Howards may be a provided to provide the contraction Howards are made to provide the second or the second the information Hegarty agreed to provide would improve the article and there was lit-tle chance that another publication could get the story.

The nugazine, said Fonzi, also extracted a promise from Hegarty that the FBI would turn over all of its files on Raymond to Florida low enforcement authorities to help in their investigation of the three missing persons - a promise that Fonzi says Hegur ty honored

Fonzi said that Hegarty memorialized the February 25 agreement in a letter dated Murch I and addressed to Rauzia. the editor of Mismi/South Piorida Hegarty

"It was ... agreed that I on or about May 15, 1985, or carlier, would arrange for you and Mr. Fonzi to be given a frank and candid briefing by Assistant U.S. Attorney Vince Connelly, Northern District of Illinois. It was also agreed that the FBI would attempt to resolve some unanswered questions regarding a particular person of interest to Mr. Fonzi and your magazina."

After some preliminary telephone calls, Fenzi said, Connelly visited the magazine on Monday, May 6, 1985, to meet with the editorial board and Fonzi. At the meeting, which Fenzi said was tape-recorded with Connelly's knowledge, Connelly provided certain details about the Chicago investi-gation in which Raymond was involved and asked that the magazine further delay publication of the article.

The editorial board agreed, according to Fourl, to postpone publication until September on Councily's promise that further information would be provided. Councily, according to Eyerdam, earned loss than thrilled about what he was doing. "He amnounced with a cavest that he shouldn't be here and didn't went to be here," Eyerdam said. "He said, 'I can't help it, but this is a very important inventigation. I don't think anything quite like this has been done before."

Shortly after the May meeting, Connelly wrote a letter on behalf of U.S. Attorney Valukos to Rauxin. The letter said, "I am parties concerned are in the best interests of both the citizens of the United States and the journalism profession."

Fonzi said he and Connelly were in weekly and sometimes daily telephone contact after that.

received a telephone call from Associate Deputy U.S. Attorney General Jay B. Stephens in Washington.

Stephens, according to Mayer, agreed to provide the information the magazine wanted on Raymond if publication could be delayed until the January issue. Meyer agreed to delay publication. "I didn't want to be in the position that it looked like I was in collusion with the federal government when there was no emer-gency," he told Chicago Lawyer. "But se gency," he told Chicago Lawyer. "But se a patriotic citizen, i believed we had a duty to hold it up." Connelly flew to Mignil for another face-to-fece meeting with Fonzi and the Aligmi South Florida editorial board in carly November. The meeting also was at teaded by the magazine's attorney, Alan Rosenthal Once sgain, Cosnelly wanted to delay publication, according to various persons present, but this time everyone said no.

As November drew on, Connelly made repeated tolephone pleas for the magezine repeated to the none piess for the magazine to hold the story. As a result, Mayer said, he called Stephens in lats November and told him: "We had an understanding and now your Chicago people are leaning on our staff. I want you just to call off the dogs."

Stephens, according to Meyer, replied: "You're absolutely right. We have an agreement and wa're going to stick with it.

A few days later, Moyer said, the magazine received a six-page letter from linguity with the FBI's responses to the questions he had agreed to answer seven months earlier. The letter enid that the FBI lacked "sufficient information" to link Raymond to the three disappearant by oven a preponderance of the available evidence, much less the standard that would apply in order to seek a successful

The letter added that Raymond had not "either knowingly or inadvertently" given the FBI "any inferrection which is probative regarding the disappearances." Hegarty's response angered Fonni. "I don't think the FBI did look into the background of Raymond and these people, who he did murder," Fonni said. "Hegarty says them? he no widense linking." "Hegarty says there's no evidence linking Raymond to the murders. That's just ridiculous."

A few daye before MiamuSouth Florido's January issue went to press, FBI agents began questioning the Chicago targets of the investigation.

"On December 20," said 20th Ward Alderman Cuifford F. Kelley, "two FBI agents came to visit me. It was an unan-nounced visit. They asked a few questions about what I knew about other aldermen and their relationship to Systematic Recovery, I wasn't concerned because the questions were not about me. They did not try to flip me. I had to leave in order to have a meeting with the mayor. They told me to call them later. I tried to call them, but they weren't in. In the mean-time, I beard from another alderman that we were all visited at the same time and that I was a target of the investigation. I never returned their calls after that."

On December 23, the January issue of Miami South Florida rolled off the press. The hesdine or Fortis story said, in all capitals, "THE UNTOUCHABLE." A sub-heading said of Raymond, "He's a danger ous man, a clever man, as the is blowing the lid off corruption in Chicago as a protected FBI Informant, South Flarida police as he manufact he manufactual for the say he may also be responsible for the murders of three local people."

Miami/South Florida thus scored a major scoop - the first public disclosure of the Chicago corruption investigation—thanks to the information provided by Connelly and Hegarty.

Slay case corners Burnett the rat

By BARBARA ROSS

DANY PHONE SLEP WIND!

For 33 years, Michael Burnett bargained his way out of a lifetime in jail by helping law enforcement authorities collar other bad guys in exchange for leniency.

Last week, for the first time in his life, the Brooklynborn mole who broke the corruption scandals in New York and Chicago was hit with a non-negotiable charge: first-degree murder.

"My commitment is to see that Michael (Burnett) will be sittin' in Old Sparky some day. I would like to see him go there without passing Go, collecting $200 or apy other benefits from the FBI," said Capt. Al Ortenzo of the Fort Lauderdale Police Department.

Ortenzo's fervor is understandable

Woman disappears

It took Florida police 11 years to find out what happened to Adelaide Stiles, a 70 year-old woman who disappeared after getting suspicious about how Burnett, who had romanced her, invested her life savings of $40,000.

Tuesday, they charged Burnett and two others with feeding Stiles to the sharks, and now prosecutors are studying whether to charge Burnett with a second murder: Anne Sessa, a Florida widow who disappeared in 1977 after having an affair with Burnett and investing the bulk of her estate with him.

Both cases were dormant until earlier this year when the Daily News and reporter Gaeton Fonzi in South Florida magazine published articles on Burnett, who has been arrested 27 times and convicted nine times on charges ranging from stock fraud to bribery.

Served eight years

He has served a mere eight years in jail because, until now, he wriggled out of serving more time by offering to rat on others.

The articles questioned the FBI's ethics in using Burnett as a mole when he was suspected of murdering Stiles, Sessa and a third Floridian

They also reported that Florida cops felt the FBI shielded Burnett for years because he was making major federal cases and had joined the Witness Protection Program, in which he changed his name from Michael Raymond to Michael Burnett.

When the stories broke, Burnett was again an FBI operative. He'd been arrested in Tennessee in July 1984 but got leniency in return for helping to expose New York and Chicago officials taking Toribes from the head of a collection agency.

FBI defends using him

When the Burnett controversy broke, the FBI defended using him. Whether it's right or wrong, people who have been accused of murder or even convicted of murder have been used as informants," said Paul Miller of the FBI's Miami office. The FBI denied it ever stymied Florida investigators and vowed to help with the renewed probe, turning over reams of material that provided fresh leads and disclosed other crimes Burnett was suspected of committing.

Last week, even after Burnett was charged with murder, the FBI said simply. "We're aware of the guy's background. We've used hit men and organized crime ingures to testify against other hit men and other organized crime figures."

Others disagree with the FBI's priorities.

William Heffernan, an ethics specialist at John Jay College of Cruminal Justice, said Burnen's murder charge makes it more compelling for the FBI to explain why it used a suspected murderer to catch criminals accused of lesser crimes. He also called for a congressional inquiry.

"Could the FBI have achieved the same results with some other mole? Should the FBI draw up some guidelines to determine what's an acceptable tradeoff? This is something for (Rep. Peter) Rodino's (House Judiciary) committee." Heffernan said.

"You don't work effectively by using Sunday school teachers" in criminal investigations. Ortenzo acknowledges. But, he said, when an informant is "very clearly implicated" in a homicide, the murder investigation should take top priority.

Tenacity and luck

The story of the Stiles and Sessa cases is one of police tenacity and luck, and the extent of the FBI's cooperation is still a matter of debate.

Fort Lauderdale detective Gary Ciani said the cases were "probably the most frustrating" because "everywhere you went witnesses were either dead or had had a stroke. Papers were destroyed. Buildings were leveled

"You realized you had to depend on people, people who get pretty confident about their stories after 11 years," he said.

Ciani said he, Detective John Palmer of the Broward County sheriff's office and Jack Lovell, an investigator for the local prosecutor, spent their first weeks going over old ground.

Interview witnesses

They found witnesses who saw Stiles and Burnett leave together on a vacation, restablished the motive (her checking account drained into a Burnett company) and interviewed people who had known the couple in 1975.

Cisni said Burnett's secretary, Barbara Bishop, told them that in 1975, on her boss' orders, she checked into a Holiday Inn, posing as Stiles. That gave Burnett an alibi: that he left Stiles at the motel and never saw her again.

Robert Johnstone, Burnett's go fer in 1975, refused to talk after Burnett's attorney. William Aronwald, "ordered us out of the nouse," Ciani said.

A buddy testifies

Police say another Burnett buddy, Ralph Rapp, provided more details: Stiles was thrown over the side of a boat, and Sessa was "under a rock."

Ciani said detectives figured that if Burneti had told Rapp about the murders, "he could have told others."
They concentrated on interviewing people named in the FBI's Burnett files.

One of the names was Vernon Raye Frazier, who is charged with Stilles' murder, along with Johnstone and Burnett.

The cops discovered that Frazier had set Burnett up for the Tennessee arrest after he got cold feet about going through with an armed burglary of a wealthy businessman's house.

On March 28, Ciani said, police asked the FBI where Frazier was. They were told Frazier was believed to be somewhere in California and that federal marshals wanted him for a parole violation.

Under federal detainer

What the FBI didn't say—and it's unclear why—is that almost six weeks earlier, the marshals had found Fracter in a San Diego jail where they put him under a federal detainer. That meant Fracier would go into federal custody as soon he finished serving time on a state charge of passing bad checks.

"I'm not saying the FBI was trying to hide him. I don't know why they didn't know where he was. All I know is that we did an intense search for him and turned up empty." Ciani said.

Florida cops discovered Frazier's wheresbouts accidentally on June 2 when the Chicago Tribune ran a jail-house interview in which Frazier said Burnett had bragged about committing several murders.

Ciani said that in August, after several interviews with police, Frazier admitted he'd actually been an eyewitness to the Stiles murder. He "broke down and cried. It was a major breakthrough." Ciani said.

breakthrough," Cianl said.

Fort Lauderdale cops began a complicated, monthlong battle to get custody of Frazier. They were desperate to get him before his San Diego isil term ended in mid September because if the marshals got him first, Florida police would need a subpena to get him out of federal custody. Legally, that would mean giving Frazier full immunity.

"I thought there was more they (the FBI) could do to assist us in producing Frazier," said Ortenzo. Without that help, he and Clani got Frazier on Sept. 4, just as the marshals were in the Jail processing paperwork to hold him.

"I kept looking for the marshals at the airport. As the plane went down the runway, we both looked out the window with a sigh of relief that we weren't being stopped." Ortenzo recalled.

On Sept. 8, police said they got another shock: Frazier now confessed that he hadn't just seen the murder, he'd participated in it with Burnett and Johnstone.

We tried to trip him up several ways to make sure he was telling the truth, but he passed every test, Cani said

Frazier is expected to cooperate in exchange for a second-degree murder conviction, which means life in prison instead of the possible death penalty that Burnett faces.

"I think we have a pretty good case. We have the witnesses, the motive," said Ciani.

Burnett is now in a federal penitentiary, coping with a bad heart and troublesome liver. The only thing that may give out before the cops in his health.

Burnett compatriot describes slaying of Adelaide Stiles

By GAETON FONZI

Special to the Daily News

World-class swindler Michael Burnett calmly lit a cigar as the small cabin cruiser cut the waters south of Miami off the Florida Keys, Allegedly, it was the signal for murder.

Within minutes, Adelaide Stiles, a large, frumpy woman with hair dyed pitch-black, would be dead, her head bashed in by the swing of a tire iron and her body dismembered and chummed overboard for the sharks chummed overboard for the sharks.

That is the account of Vernon's Frazier, 34, a husky ex-Marine who has confessed to participating in Stiles' murder with Burnett and Robert (Bobby Dell) Johnstone, a boat captain from Port Orange, Fla. Based on a jailhouse interview, it is told here for the first time publicly.

"When Michael lit the cigar I kind, of froze for a second," recalls Frazier.
"Then for some strange reason I snapped right out of it and moved quickly to get the tire iron we put hidden next to the sink Michael had sat Stiles where her back was to me and he was keepin' her attention by talkin'.

"I just blocked everything out of my mind and concentrated on her neck area. They told me in the Marines not to aim for the headbecause if the head moves, you miss. And I didn't want to miss, I wanted to make sure I hit her and...and..."

Frazier pauses and stares for a moment.

"... and I just hit her. I bit her the first time on the left side of the head. Then I hit her again. It was real quick, like bam! bam! When I hit her the second time she fell out of the chair. She was lookin' up at Michael as she went down and her eyes were like in a sort of shock.

"To this day I think I can hear her say, Why, Michael?' but I know I was probably imaginin' it. It was just her life breath goin' out of her."

A 33-year history of crime

Frazier's story provides a chilling look at the murder in 1975 of one woman—an easy victim who was trusting, eccentric and lonely. It also gives an insight into the allegedly murderous side of Michael Burnen, a notorious con man who has continuously been protected by the FBI.

Burnett has a 33 year history of stock swindles, forgery, bribery and other crimes, but time and again escaped long jail sentences by becoming a mole for the FBI.

When Stiles was murdered, Burnett was in the federal Witness Protection Program. His true name, in fact, was Michael Raymond. The feds changed it after he testified in 1971 before a Senate subcommittee investigating organized crime.

In his latest incarnation, Burnett was used by the FBI as a sting man who taped key conversations in a lengthy investigation that helped uncover the city corruption scandal and led to indictments of Chicago officials.

VN/Alkthe While, Florida police-listed
Burnett as the prime suspect in the

Met in Detroit

Frazier says he met Burnett in 1974 in Detroit. At the time, Frazier was working for an organized crime family in Michigan as a runner carrying gambling profits, counterfeit money and stolen securities between Detroit, Chicago. New York and Canada. He says he also transported stolen stocks for Burnett.

Frazier claims Burnett was anxious to work him into his organization. Frazier had some college education, was trained in the Marines and was an associate minister and preacher at the Second Baptist Church in his hometown of Monroe, Mich.

Recalls Frazier: "Michael told me, 'If you can convince people to believe in God, then you can convince anybody of anything."

Frazier says when Burnett called him to come to Florida he told him he had "a small problem with some old bitch."

"I admired Michael's life style, the way he dressed, how he talked, the way he maneuvered among important business people," Frazier remembers. "And I figured the only way that me, a black guy, would get the same respect and prestige he had was for me to get into his tight circle.

Florida to murder that old lady, my first reaction was I was honored he thought enough of me to invite me down here on this occasion."

Frazier also remembers thinking,

"It's a golden opportunity."

Frazier says Burnett told him that Stiles, 66, was pressing him to explain how he was investing the money she gave him, estimated to be at least $40,000. Although Stiles loved him, Burnett told Frazier, he learned that her friends were urging her to have police check out his background.

"That would have brought his whole empire down," says Frazier, "because he had dozens of other scams going on the side."

At the time, Burnett was renting the seven-bedroom waterfront home of Fort Lauderdale drug kingpin Ken Burnstine, who recently had been arrested.

Frazier earlier visited Burnett in Florida and was familiar with Burnett's ongoing con of Stiles, a woman who was well-known socially but had grown increasingly lonely and eccentric as she grew older.

Then she met Burnett. "God must love me, having me meet my Mike at this particular time," she wrote to a friend

According to Frazier, Burnett planned the murder in detail with him and Bobby Johnstone the evening before. Burnett had earlier told Stiles he would join her on a trip to London. Now he would suggest that they take a leisurely cruise to help him unwind from "business pressures" before departing from Miami.

A toast to murder

Frazier describes the boat as a small cabin cruiser that Johnstone captained and kept docked behind the house.

After their planning session, Frazier says, Burnett took him and Johnstone to the Mai-Kai. a popular, crowded Fort Lauderdale nightclub where they had dinner, toasted their murder plans and watched the Polynesian dancing girls.

The next morning, Burnett, a gourmet cook, fixed them a hearty breakfast and then left to pick up Stiles-Meanwhile, Frazier and Johnstone loaded concrete blocks, bricks, a hacksaw, an ax and plastic bags aboard the boat. When Burnett returned, he asked Frazier, who pratended to be his houseboy, to help unload Stiles' luggage from the car.

"I was watchin' Michael be all lovey-dovey with her as she's gettin' out of the car," Frazier recalls, "and I was laughin' to myself inside because I know this man don't care nothin' about this lady and in a few hours he's gonna make her a dead old lady."

Still, Frazier now says, as the boat headed out from Port Everglades and down the Florids coast, and as he watched Burnett ply Stiles with sweet talk and martinis in the cabin below, he began having second thoughts.

"She wasn't attractive, by a long shot," he says, "and here she's think-in' she finally found somebody who loved her. I started feelin' sorry for the woman. I suddenly didn't want to kill her."

'Too far into the game'

Frazier says he reported his feeling to Johnstone, who was at the wheel on the bridge. "Bobby told me, Well, Vernon, you're too far into the game now," Frazier recalls. "He says, 'If you don't do it, we're gonns do it, and then we're gonns get rid of you.'"

Later Frazier saw Johnstone put the boat on automatic pilot and go below to whisper to Burnett. Shortly, Burnett soothed Frazier.

"I understand what you're goin through." Frarier kays Burnett told him. "He says, 'Don't worry about it. Just put your feelings aside and concentrate on what you're gonus do. And stay out of the cabin for a white so you'll get some fresh air and won't have to listen to the buil I'm threwin' at her."

Soon Frazier's misgivings turned to a sense of impending excitement.

"It was kind of like before a football game," recalls Frazier, who was a star running back on his high school team. "You feel your adrenaline gettin' built up because you know you're gonna be on center stage."

The prearranged signal for action, according to Frarier, came when Burnett lit a eigar as the boat moved into the less crowded waters of Hawk Channel off the Keys, Frazier wielded the tire from.

Thea. Frazier says, both fre and Burnett stood motionless for a moment, staring down at the crumpled heap of Adelaide Stiles. "Then Bobby came down from the bridge and Michael said, 'Let's get this over with,' and we moved into action."

They used a backsaw and an ax to dismember the body. "Michael wanted to make sure we opened her up enough so that the sharks would get to her all," Frazier 5255.

The parts were put in plastic garbage bags and what was left of the body was lifted out of the cabin and draped over the side of the bost. A cinder thock was tied to the torse.

"Then Michael handed me his 3mm gun and told me to shoot her in the head." apparently to open every part of the body to the sharks. Frazier says "He said rareful not to shoot the boat or else all af us would never get back I shot her carefully twice in the head."

Gaeton Fonzi is a Florida. based investigative reporter who broke the story of the FBI's relationship with master con man Michael Burnett. Fonzi revesied that the FBI used Burnett as an undercover mole in a Chicago corruption probe even though Burnett was a suspect in three murders. Federal authorities also used Burnett to secretly tape record a conversation here that played a key role in exposing the Parking Violations Bureau scandal. Based on an exclusive interview with a confessed killer, Fon-21 now tells the story of one of Burnett's alleged murders.

After the boxf was turned around and the automatic pilot set at trolling speed, the three men retrieved the plastic bags from the cabin and slowly dumped the body parts over the transom. As the boat drifted north. Frazier looked back and saw the water begin to pop with splashes of fish in a feeding frenzy.

"On the way back." Frazier recalls. "Michael told me I did a real good job and that I had to remember the first one is the hardest. He said after you got your first murder under your belt, the next one is easier."

Back at the house in Fort Lauderdale, Frazier says, Burnett paid him $10,000 and taid him be now consisered him part of his inner circle. "I feld a read sense of satisfaction," Frazier now admirs. "It was like any good job you do, you pat yourself on the back And I was proud that I did such a good job for Michael. He was my idol."

Then Burnett broke out a bottle of good red wine and the three men tousted the successful completion of Adelside Stiles marrier.

Frazier, who recently pleaded gusty to the Stiles murder, told his story in an interview arranged by his attorney. Public Defender Steven Michaelson.

Burnett and Johnstone were indicted on first-degree marker charges in Florida on Sept. 30. The case was built as Franker's word and other evidence gathered by Fort Landerdale homicide Detective Gary Classi and state attorney investigator Jack Lovell.

But local efficies have yet to extricate Burnett from the clutches of federal authorities, who consider him a valuable asset in their political corruption cases in Chicago.

Connelly meets double deadline

By Adrienne Drell

Vincent J. Connelly has never missed a deadline.

And he is keeping his record intact.

Connelly, 36, chief of the special prosecutions division, managed to complete final details on the massive 122-page indictment of former mayoral aide Clarence McClain and eight others exactly one day before leaving his job Friday,

By heating the deadline, the architect of the Operation Incubator investigation also complied with a federal judge's directive to indict McClain by today or explain why finday, Connelly becomes a part-ner at the law firm of Mayer Brown & Platt, where he will specialize in litigation.

"It's end but exciting to contemplate the new challenges," said Connelly, a tall, dapper prosecutor known for his charm and persua-

Vincent J. Connelly

New jobs Connelly today becomes a partner at the law firm of Mayer Brown & Plant

Previous job: Chief of special prosecutions division, U.S. attorney's office for the northern district of Illinois. He has spent the last 11 years in the prosecutor's office. His most visible achievement has been guiding the Operation Incubator investisiveness before a jury.

During his 11 years in the pros-ecutor's office, Connelly, a 1975 graduate of the University of Chi-cupo Law School, has tried many complicated stock fraud cases and pioneered the use of racketeering statutes to convict owners of several South Side beauty schools.

But his most visible achievement has been shepherding the municipal investigation with the catchy Operation Incubator title. It has resulted in the indictments of 15 people here, five of whom have been convicted.

Connelly worked closely with the FBI and Internal Revenue Service in its undercover procedures, tape-recording secret meetings among government informant Michael Raymond, politicians and influential husinessmen. Connelly spent nights reviewing videotapes of the claudestine meetings.

it was Connelly who flew to Flor ida in 1985 to plead with magazine reporter Gaeton Fonzi not to publish a story about Raymond that would have jeopardized the ongoing investigation.

Once the project was revealed in December, 1985. Connelly and his boss, U.S. Attorney Anton R. Valukas, refused to comment. But they were severely criticized for leaking information on unindicted figures Valukas explained that Fonzi had sold his materials to the Tribune Co. McClain filed several lawsuits alleging his constitutional rights were being violated. Most of the suits were dismissed.

Asked how he managed to synchronize his departure with Thursday's indictments, Connelly laughed and said, "Timing is every thing."

Dour	b6 b7C
This letter is to confirm our conversation of February 25, 1985. At your office in the presence of Gaeton Fonzi. and FBI Special Agent During our conversation the parties present reached an agreement whereby a specific story being prepared by Mr. Fonzi would not be published until the July issue of your magazine. It was also agreed that I, on or about May 15, 1985, or earlier, would arrange for you and Mr. Fonzi to be given a Frank and candid briefing by Assistant United States Attorney Northern District of Illinois. It was also agreed that the FBI would attempt to resolve some unanswered questions regarding a particular person of interest to Mr. Fonzi and your magazine.	ъ6 ъ7С
I would like to take this opportunity also to thank you, Mr. Fonzi and for having taken the time out of your busy schedules to meet with me. I am confident the actions being taken by all parties concerned are in the best interest of both the citizens of the United States and the journalism profession.	ь6 b7С
Until you hear from me again, please maintain this matter in absolute confidence as the safety of Special Agents of the FBI and one other person is of the utmost importance to me.
Sincerely yours,

The article discussed in the 3/1/85 letter to relates to an investigative journalism manuscript prepared by writer GAETON FONZI concerning
The manuscript for the proposed article appeared to be approximately two inches thick and the gist of the article was said to revolve around a series of facts and circumstances that would tend to indicate that
I advised all parties present to the conversation that and the FBI would cooperate with them but in so doing would not violate existing law.

THE UNTOUCHABLE

He's a dangerous man, a clever man, and he is blowing the lid off political corruption in Chicago as a protected FBI informant. South Florida police say he may also be responsible for the murders of three local people.

The man is Michael Burnett. He is a crook. A professional con man. An admitted international swindler. A skilled llar. local police say he may also be a murderer.

But now Michael Burnett is working as an undercover informant for the US Department of Justice and its Investigative arm, the Federal Bureau of investigation. Although the feds acknowledge they are aware of his background, they have to protect him. Because once again, as several times in the past, Burnett is their conspirator in snaring culprits Justice thinks are bigger fish than he.

Once again, when the time comes, they will bring Burnett to center stage. Amid great hoopla and national press coverage, they will acknowledge that Michael Burnett has been their secret star in a major Abscam-type operation. That operation, the Department of Justice says, will expose public corruption in Chicago. The assistant US Attorney heading the investigation in Chicago says it will lead to a dozen indictments. And Michael Burnett, the virtuoso undercover informant, will emerge a hero.

let this same Michael Burnett has eluded South Florida law enforcement agencies for more than a decade. Local police have long been looking into Burnett's involvement in the disappearances over the last 10 years of two women from Broward and a man from Palm Beach. The local police consider the cases homicides. Broward detectives have a sworn statement from a witness who said Burnett bragged that he killed two of the missing people.

The people shown in this artist's conception are, from top, Adelaide Stiles, Anne Sessa, Max Bussard and Michael Burnett.

He had risen to the highest ranks of international securities swindling and fraud.

But down through the years, Michael Burnett has remained untouchable thanks largely to the US Department of Justice and the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

So close has the alliance between Michael Burnett and the Federal government become that FBI and justice Department officials from Chicago took the unprecedented step of revealing the existence of an on-going secret investigation when they learned of this article.

They said they did so to protect the lives of those involved in the investigation, including that of career criminal Michael Burnett.*

Vincent Connelly, the assistant US Attorney in charge of the Justice Department investigation in Chicago, acknowledges that Burnen's extensive criminal background was not a Hability. In fact, it made him the perfect informant. "That's the Irony of the situation," Connelly says. "It's impossible for the FBI to ever create an undercover agent who could burrow in where this guy is because of his past pedigree."

On such arrangements and such frontes, Michael Burnett has managed to sustain and prosper in his long criminal career.

THE TESTIMONY OF GEORGE WHITE

The thread of this story began in the summer of 1971. The US Senate's Permanent Subcommittee on investigations, headed by Sen. John McClellan, was in the midst of its sensational hearings on organized crime. National television audiences were being treated to the dramatic testimony of stool pigeons.

In the hours and days that followed, witness George Whitetestifying with immunity under an assumed name—regaled the senators, the press and the American public with the fascinating details of his colorful career. Without cracking the slightest smile, he told the committee, 'I have spent most of my mature life in the securities field..."

That was like Jesse James saying he had been in banking. In fact, George White had risen to the highest echelons of the international securities swindling racket and financial fraud game. He told how he had created artificial markets for dozens of worthless stocks, wheeled and dealed with stolen securities, used counterfell stocks and bonds as collateral for huge banks loans, and established short-lived paper corporations, as well as off-shore foreign banks and financial conduits for quick deals. He wound up associating with ranking members of organized crime.

"As far as is known, never before has the Justice Department or the FBI orchestrated such a revelation. They did so some months ago, when we asked them to respond to allegations in this story. MiamilSouth Florida agreed to delay publication three times because the FBI and Justice said premature expose of Michael Burnett would endange his life and the lives of the FBI agents working undercover with him and would compromise a significant corruption investigation. In communication with high-ranking Justice Department officials, we were advised that the investigation would be closed prior to this issue going to print.

Yer, despite the scope of his lliegal activities, involving, as he himself put it, "many millions of dollars," White had been arrested only about a haif dozen times prior to his Senate testimony. He also had spent very little time behind bars.

He claimed that he was quick to bribe judges. He told the Senators that, early on, he had become a valuable informant for the Federal Bureau of investigation. Threatened with an indictment for fraudulently exporting funds to Switzerland, he agreed to become a regular snitch for the government. "My efforts in cooperating with federal authorities," he boasted, "led to the recovery of hundreds of thousands of dollars of stolen securities."

And when George White finished his sensational testimony, the Senators praised him effusively. Summing up, Chairman McClellan bade the witness good fortune: 'I hope that you will ultimately have the opportunity to compete in this world legitimately...I commend you very highly, and I know others feel the same way.'

George White glowed. "Thank you gentlemen," he said. Then he slowly rose and trundled out of the hearing room, out of Washington and back into his life of crime.

Within a week, The New York Times revealed that George White's real name was Michael Raymond. After the Senate hearings, Michael Raymond was placed in the Government Witness Protection Program, where his name was changed to Michael Burnett.

THE RUINATION OF MAX BUSSARD

Pairicia Bussard died a few months ago. When we first interviewed her late in 1984, she didn't want her current name revealed because, she said, after all those years she was still afraid of Michael Burnett. She said her husband, Max Bussard, was going to cause Burnett problems and she knew that's why her husband disappeared.

Mrs. Bussard was an attractive woman with clear blue eyes, but her hair had gone white, there was a tremor in her voice, her body was thinning and her skin grew more pallid with every chemotherapy treatment. She showed the effects of the trauma of her husband's disappearance and her terrifying encounters with the man she knew as Michael Burnett.

"I consider myself very lucky to be alive after knowing him," she said. "Ile's a treacherous man."

Patricia Bussard said her life with Max was beautiful before Michael Burnett came into it. Max was a successful accountant. He provided well for her and their three children. They had a luxurious four-bedroom home in Boca Raton with a large swimming pool and a guest house. The only trouble with Max, she said, was that he was too good-hearted. He even invited Michael Burnett and his partner, Bobby Johnstone, to live with them until they found a place of their own when they first came down from New York.

Michael Burnett seemed an exceptionally charming man, she remembered, a perfect guest, a gournet cook. He made his own Thousand Island dressing. When her youngest daughter had a big birthday party, he volunteered to do all the cooking. "He told me that he began in the restaurant business in New York as a dishwasher when he was 12 years old," she said.

Bussard had met Michael Burnett through one of his clients, a Hollywood businessman named William Suave (Ibday Suave says he doesn't remember how he met Burnett, but says he holds $30,000 of worthless stock that Burnett sold him.) Burnett told Bussard that he was moving down from New York and he needed a financial man to head up this new company he was forming to handle a sensational new product, synthetic charcoal that could be safely burned indoors. Burnett, as it turned out, would use Bussard as his front.

Mrs. Bussard remembers that the week before Memorial Day in 1974, Max told her that Burnett wanted him to go to Chicago to check on the progress of equipment being designed for the new product.

Max Bussard called his wife on the morning he was scheduled to return home from Chicago. "He said that something had come up and he couldn't come home that evening," she recalled. "He said he would take the noon plane the next day. He seemed concerned and I asked him what was the matter. He said he had found something out, something he would have to report, but he didn't want to discuss it over the phone".

Mrs. Bussard cailed Burnett when It was clear her husband had missed his flight. He assured her nothing was wrong. Two frantic days later, with yet no word from Max, his wife again called Burnett who said he would come to the house. "I was on the verge of a nervous breakdown," she recalled. "I didn't know what to do. When Michael came over I pleaded with him to help me, to go to the police with me. Suddenly he was like another person. He had absolutely no sympathy, no understanding. "You just better stay out of this,' he told me. "just don't open your mouth." Then he gave me two $100 bills. He said that was part of Max's back salary. But we've got to look for my husband!" I told him. That made him very angry. He shook his fist at me and said, I'm advising you not to do anything! The way he changed was so completely shocking. I remember suddenly being very afraid of him."

Eventually, Mrs. Bussard's life would come close to falling completely to pieces. Without an insurance claim or means of support, she lost her house and car and was forced to apply for food stamps to feed her children. Psychiatric treatment by a community counselor helped her pull herself together. "I finally went to an attorney, Burton Levey, who had been working with Max on the business. There's nothing you can do now,' he told me. Why don't you try to forget the past and make a new life for yourself,' he said. He said he would get me a divorce and I could go on with my life. So eventually I did exactly what Burton Levey told me to. He charged me $350 for the divorce." Levey had also worked as Burnett's attorney.

It may sound like Pat Bussard gave up easily. But that was hardly the case. First she went to the Boca Raton Chief of Police, the friend of a friend. "I think he thought I was crazy." she recalls, "He kept asking me If we had any domestic problems. I kept trying to tell him I thought Max might have been murdered. I knew he didn't believe me." Another terrible distillusionment came, said Mrs. Bussard, when two men who identified themselves as US Marshals knocked on her door. They said her husband used stolen Treasury notes as collateral on a business loan. They asked where her husband was. She said she had no idea where he was and wouldn't believe that Max would do that. She said he must have received the stolen notes from Burnett. They asked if she could lure Burnett to a meeting so that they could confront him.

"I told them that Michael was pretty angry with me but that I would try to help," she recalled. "Would you believe I set up a meeting at the Holiday inn West and sat there with that man, waiting for the marshals to show up. I was scared to death. And Michael let me know he had a gun on him. He tried to tell me that Max wasn't happy with me and he probably ran off somewhere. I was so angry but I couldn't let on. I kept looking around for the marshals. I couldn't believe it. They never showed up."

The next morning when she called one of the marshals, she said, he acted very nonchalant. He told her they had gotten tied up on another matter and couldn't make the meeting she had set up with Burnett.

Another shock came when Mrs. Bussard encountered the FBI. A couple of weeks after her husband's disappearance she searched the guest room Burnett and Johnstone had lived in briefly. She found some documents, a gun and, under the mattress, Bobby Johnstone's wallet. She said there were identification cards indicating several different aliases. She said she immediately packed everything she found into a briefcase, borrowed a car, then drove to the Federal Building in West Palm Beach and said she wanted to see an FBI agent.

Mrs. Bussard didn't remember the name of the agent but, she said, he seemed to know what was going on. He gave her his number and said he was going to Key West that weekend, where, he said, Michael Burnett was going for a meeting. He said he would call her on Monday and let her know what happened.

Mrs. Bussard said the FBI agent never called her. And he didn't return her calls. When she finally reached him he said he couldn't tell her anything. "I couldn't stand it any longer," she said. "I finally accused him right over the phone of taking a payoff. I said, 'You've got to be getting paid off! He said, 'Oh, you're getting more neurotic every day.' Yes, I guess I was neurotic. I was down to about 80 pounds then and felt like I was going out of my mind."

What happened to the evidence in the briefcase that Mrs. Bussard turned over to the FBI? Was there ever an FBI investigation of Michael Burnett's involvement in the disappearance of Max Bussard?

More than a year after Mrs. Bussard received her last phone call from her husband, a Federal Grand Jury in Palm Beach handed down an indictment charging Max Bussard with unlawfully pledging stolen Treasure notes as collateral on a business loan for Michael Burnett's company. Late last year, the indictment was transferred in the Court CONTANCED ON PAGE 164

US Attorney Karen Atkinson presented a court order moving to dismiss the indictment because, according to a report she received from the FBI, "It would appear to be the case" that Max Bussard was dead.

When the indictment against Bussard was thrown out, so were similar charges pending against Michael Burnett and Robert Johnstone.

THE TRAGIC LOVE OF ADELAIDE STILES

Washington under the name of George White, Adelaide Ullian Stiles was clinging to her sad social charade in Fort Lauderdale.

"Addie was really just a lonely old woman," says her friend Pat Sealey who now raises horses in Oklahoma. "I met her when I first is difficult to imagine Michael Burnett being came to Fort Lauderdale in 1949," Sealey recalls. "I was covering the society beat for the News at the time and Addie was a very successful public relations woman. Addic was very bright and very witty and lots of fun." When Addie Stiles disappeared in 1975, Sealey was a reporter for the Broward edition of The Miami Herald.

Adelaide's family arrived in Broward from Boston early enough and with sufficient social credentials.

Addie never let on that money was a probshe gave was that having a job was simply a playful pastime. But, friends say, it was resources.

Still, Addie Stiles put up a good front. Her Jean Kempinski and her husband, who went one heard a word from her, ever again. Late by the name Ted Komp, of an Impending inheritance, they became fast friends. Ted said he was in the securities business. Addle said her mother had just passed away at age 100 as the estate was settled, Addic claimed, she her there but never showed up and never sent Almost immediately her Lauderdale friends noticed her strange behavior. They didn't know that Addie's inheritance was not the fortune she thought it would be and told everyone it was. She inherited only about $45,000 and two houses she couldn't afford to maintain. As a result, she was forced to rent out the main house and live in the small cottage at the rear of the property. There, alone with a radio and a hospitate, her ioneliness played tricks with her mind. Although she regularly When Michael Raymond was testifying in paraded nude in front of open windows, she repeatedly complained to the police about Peeping Toms.

Suddenly she reverted to the old Addie. She Time had been cruel to Adelaide. She was was spirited and bubbly and fun again. She was like a schoolgirl with a mad crush on the new boy in class. Her new beau's name was Michael Burnett, She called him "My Mike."

Addle Stiles was no Raquel Welch, but it anyone's heart throb. "Well for heaven's sake," a friend of Addie's recalls, "he was a fat slob." Burnett was a rather heavy man in his mid-40s, but in Addie's eyes he was Errol Flynn. He would drive her around town in his new Chrysler, take her to dinner regularly and, whenever things needed fixing in her cottage, he would send over a stocky little fellow with an English accent called Bobby Johnstone who seemed to be Burnett's Indentured servant. wealth to give the Ultians acceptable local Burnett claimed to be a corporate executive in the energy business.

Early in 1975, Addie told friends that she lem to her. On the contrary, the impression was planning to go to Europe that summer. By spring, bursting with fresh excitement, she sald Michael had business in Europe and they probably the press of financial reality that would go together. One day in July, Lynwood caused her to leave South Florida and flee to Drake, an interior designer who rented Addie's New York City. The move was a disaster for big house, saw Michael Burnett drive up to Adelaide. She had a lightning fling of a mar- the cottage and load Addle's suitcases into his riage with a newspaperman who left her only car. Addle had told Drake and other friends his name. A mental breakdown and costly that they would visit the Keys first, return visits to a psychiatrist drained her limited to Miami, fly to Nassau, then on to Luxembourg and London.

Adelaide always kept in touch with close ill fortunes were simply temporary, she told friends, bombarding them with phone calls her New York acquaintances. When Addie told and cards whenever she was away, yet no in August, more than five weeks after Addie Stiles left with Burnett, Drake received a telephone call from Adelaide's former Radeliffe classmate who had just returned from Lonand left her a sizeable inheritance. As soon don. Adelaide, she said, had agreed to meet Drake began calling Addie's friends and they began searching for information. Someone learned that Michael Burnett had been seen around town just the week before Another friend remembered the name of Burnett's company in Miami. After numerous attempts, she finally reached him.

No, Burnett said, he hadn't gone to Europe with Addie.

There was a last-minute change in his business plans, he said, and he couldn't get away. Yes, Adelaide was very distraught by that, he said, and they had a bit of an argument. He had left her at the Holiday inn on Brickell Avenue in Miami. That was the last he had seen or heard from her. He assumed she had gone straight on to Europe alone. She hadn't? And no one has heard from her? That's strange, he said. I'm very concerned, he said. I'll do some immediate checking on that. I'll check on that, Michael Burnett said, and I'll call you back.

Burnett never did cali back Addie's friend so she called Drake and urged him to call the

The first police report of Adelaide Stiles' disappearance is dated August 28, 1975. The investigation of Adelaide's disappearance by the Fort Lauderdale police was handled routinely. More than a half dozen investigators dipped in and out of the case. It was simply an "incident," a report of an adult who hadn't been heard from recently. Given the facts known at the time, there was really no reason to give Adelaide Stiles' "disappearance" special priority. She had a history of acting strangely. Investigators couldn't reach Burnett himself. His firm, Energy Resource Associates, had closed its Mlami office.

More than three months after Drake saw Adelaide Stiles drive off with Burnett, Fort Lauderdale detectives began probing the case with renewed interest that was sparked by a discovery made by reporter Pat Sealey and by information dug up by private detective Robert McGarvey, who had been hired by Adelaide's brother, Dr. Lou Ullian, now Sealey chanced upon a 1973 book entitled The Rountain Pen Conspiracy by Wall Street Journal reporter Jonathan Kwitny, The book described a network of the top con men in the world and revealed the complexity of their scams. Among those given some prominence -including a photo-was Michael Raymond.

And that's how Pat Sealey-and the Fort Lauderdale Police Department-discovered who Michael Burnett really was,

Private investigator McGarvey found that Adelaide had about $42,000 in her banking accounts when she first met Burnett. All but $500 had been withdrawn over several weeks prior to her disappearance. Adelaide made one of her largest withdrawals on the day she was last seen. That was a cashier's check endorsed by Adelaide and re-endorsed with a stamp to Energy Resource Associates.

By the time Fort Lauderdale Police investigators began taking a serious look into Adelaide Stiles' disappearance, Michael Burnett was living in Fort Lauderdale with his associate, Englishman Bobby Johnstone, in a fancy waterfront home on Middle River Drive. The home, well known to both local and federal cops, had once belonged to the late Ken Burnstine, a Broward developer, drug smuggler and federal informant until his death in a myster-

Burnstine's estate was under the control of Miami attorney, Burton Levey, who had handled Burnett's business with Max Bussard, as well as Mrs. Bussard's divorce. When Fort Lauderdale detectives attempted to question Burnett about Stiles' disappearance, they were never able to reach him or confront him directly. When they contacted Levey, he said his client "did not wish to discuss Adelaide Stiles."

And that, simply and legally, was that. About six months after Adelaide disappeared, a Fort Lauderdale detective received a call from a Miami FBI agent who had, unofficially, been of some help.

The Miami agent told the Fort Lauderdale detective that he had recently heard from one of his old contacts in the circle, a con man named Ralph Rapp, who wanted to talk about Mike Raymond.

Rapp revealed to the Fort Lauderdale police the details of Adelaide Stiles' relationship with Michael Raymond/Burnett. He said Raymond/ Burnett had contacted him after he set up Energy Resource Associates in Miami, Burnett told Rapp he was looking for "investors." Rapp knew what he meant and, figuring a percentage, started making calls. One call was to Jean Kempinski's husband, Ted Kemp. What a coincidence, Kemp told Rapp. He and his wife had recently gotten friendly with a woman who had come into a sizeable inheritance and moved back to South Florida, Adelaide Stiles.

The tape recording of Rapp's interview and his signed statement are still in the Fort Lauderdale police files. Rapp, afraid that Raymond might be planning to kill him, swore that Raymond told him that he had murdered Adelaide Stiles and "another guy they're looking for in Florida."

Ralph Rapp had known Raymond for more than 20 years. They had been in numerous illegal deals together. After Raymond had set up his Florida operation, Rapp had given him sleep on his couch whenever he came back to New York.

In October, 1975, Rapp recalled, Raymond returned to New York and stayed in his apartment. Raymond brought with him a news article from The Miami Herald. It was Pat Sealey's place about Adelaide Stiles' disappearance, the one that revealed that Michael Raymond was the notorious swindler Michael

"He laughed about it," Rapp said, "He had a clipping of the newspaper article which he let me read. Then he said, You see, all this was brought out and I had to kill her because of that goddamn Kempinski (Ted Kemp) warning her about me. If he had only kept his mouth shut, I would never have had to do it."

> Ralph Rapp: Burnett said to me, "I had to kill her because of that goddamn Kempinski warning her about me."

Toward the end of the questioning the detective asked Rapp 'As it stands now, are you in fear of your life?"

"Absolutely," Rapp answered, "The sooner he's arrested on this, the safer I'll be I won't feel safe until he's arrested."

Raiph Rapp still doesn't feel safe. The Fort Lauderdale police never arrested Michael Burnett. Although detectives corroborated a good deal of what Ralph Rapp told them and felt strongly that an indictment should be brought against Burnett, they were persuaded by the State Attorney's office that they needed more evidence. According to one of the detectives, an assistant state attorney said that in the absence of Adelaide Stiles' body and any statement from Burnett himself, it would be a difficult case to prove. Besides, Adelaide wasn't the best of victims; she had been too flighty and unreliable. (That thenassistant state attorney, now a judge, today says he has no recollection of such a contention. In fact, he doesn't remember the case at ali.)

Not long after Ralph Rapp gave his statement, the Fort Lauderdale homicide squad got a call from a police department in the Florida Keys. The caller said that a diver, who just a key to his apartment so Raymond could happened to be a Metro-Dade cop, was diving in the shallow reefs off the Keys and found a suitcase with a tag bearing the name and Fort Lauderdale address of an Adelaide

The suitcase was never retrieved from the Keys police. According to a supervising sergeant in the homicide squad, "Things were different then" and he had problems getting permission to spend the money to send a man down to the Keys. By the time a Fort Lauderdale detective decided to go down to the Keys on his own time and expense several weeks later to get the suitcase, it had been thrown away. Says the detective today: "To them it was just an old sultcase full of waterlogged clothes and, since we didn't come down to get it right away, they figured it mustn't have been important."

THE STILES INVESTIGATION

Without Burnett's cooperation or a body, there were few clues to pursue in the case of Adelaide Stiles.

Records at the Holiday Inn showed a woman named Adelaide Stiles checked in the evening of July 21, 1975, the day she was seen leaving her cottage. She paid cash in advance for one night, stayed for two and left without paying for the second night. No one at the hotel remembered her or could identify her photograph.

That made the detectives wonder if it really was Stiles who checked into that hotel. Today, given evidence that developed later, they still wonder.

The Fort Lauderdale investigators felt they had hit a wail. When they learned that Burnett was really the international con man named Michael Raymond who had testified before the McClellan committee, they felt the next step required FBi cooperation. It turned out to be a difficult step.

There is no olficial public record indicating that Michael Raymond was then-or is now -in the Federal Government Witness Protection Program. But, in his 1977 book The Alias Program, Washington attorney and CBS correspondent Fred Graham specifically says Michael Raymond was "given the new identity of Michael Burnett by the Justice Department."

The Fort Lauderdale police didn't have to read Fred Graham's book to figure that out. A check of the computerized national criminal information network, a system run by the FBI out of which local law enforcement agencies can pull rap sheets on almost anyone who has ever been arrested on a federal charge, revealed that Raymond was no longer listed. Although Raymond was a major criminal with a long record, the Justice Department had made him disappear.

Gerald Shur, the Justice Department's former chief of intelligence who has run the Witness Protection Program since its inception, told Graham that he was never informed that anywhere

Yet FBI agents in all three of the Bureau's Gold Coast offices-Miami, Lauderdale and Palm Beach-were aware of Stiles' disappearance and Burnett's involvement with her. According to a Fort Lauderdale homicide detective then supervising the case, the fact that Raymond was or had been in the Federal Witness Protection Program was a definite stumbling block in his unit's investigation.

Nevertheless, the FBI isn't a cohesive monollth. When contact was made with a few individual agents who may not have been aware of Raymond's special status, Fort Lauderdale detectives did glean some Information. One Miami agent, for Instance, had known Raymond for years in New York and worked with him as an informant on a major case in Los Angeles, where millions in city payroli checks had been stolen and forged. Burnett received a $50,000 payoff for that. The agent didn't know how many other cases Burnett was working as an informant, but other sources Indicated he was being used by the Bureau in New York and Chleago.

Another Fort Lauderdale detective, seeking information from the FBI's Palm Beach office, talked to an agent unfamiliar with Burnett's background. The agent said he was just working a stolen securities and bank fraud case that involved Burnett and he had dug up a thick file. He said he would be glad to cooperate with the local detective. However, when the detective went to Palm Beach to review the file, he was told that agent had gone on sick leave and that the Bureau's files would not be made available.

THE END OF ANNE SESSA

About 18 months after Adelaide Stiles left her cottage for last time, a wealthy 63-yearold woman who lived at the fuxurious Sea Ranch Club, wrote a letter:

"Dear Sir: I am writing in response to your ad placed in the Fort Lauderdale News, 1 am an intelligent, sincere, cultured widow, five feet three blond, blue eyes, weight 115 pounds, considered attractive. I live in a condominium overlooking the ocean in the Fort Lauderdale area. I am also financially secure. Snapshot enclosed is the most recent, taken on December 3rd, 1976."

The enclosed photo showed an attractive woman in her 60s, well dressed, hair neatly coiffed. She wore a diamond mine of iewelry, Anne Sessa always wore a lot of jewelry-"gobs of it," as one friend put it. Another friend noted she had a diamond ring worth ed a memo from one of his superiors: "George about $50,000. "She always traveled with pouches of lewelry in her handbag."

She also had bags of uncut precious gems Raymond was being sought by local police in her bank vault, worth at least a quarter of a million dollars. Anne Sessa's late husband had been in the lewelry business.

Anne Sessa's friends say she wasn't the type to respond to personal ads. The man to whom she sent the letter turned it over to the Broward Sheriff when he read in the newspaper that she had disappeared. He wanted the police to know that he hadn't even responded to her letter, thank God, and had nothing to do with her disappearance.

The police knew he didn't. The police knew that the man who may have had something to do with it was the one Anne Sessa had gone to Europe with several weeks before she disappeared.

Anne's friend Sylvia Hutchinson remembers almost exactly when the European trio was set up: early January, 1977. She remembers because the yoga class she was taking with Anne Sessa was recessed for Christmas week. Only a couple of days after the last class. Anne called her and told her that a man named Michael Invited her to go to Geneva with him. "She was very excited," Sylvia Hutchinson recalls, "and she told me that she was going, of course. I said 'Well, have fun.' You know, I mean, what do you say?"

Anne Sessa's daughter Ginny, who lives in New Jersey, had received a postcard from her mother early that January, it was a photograph of a beautiful park in Geneva. "Our hotel is situated across from this photo," she wrote. "Allchael and I are spending a few days In Geneva, then perhaps Paris for the weekend, depending on the time limit...London."

Her friends say it wasn't like Anne Sessa to go cavorting around Europe with a man she had only recently met. She had been introduced to him by her late husband's stock advisor. Friends think she must have become infatuated with this fellow Michael because, in mld-January, as soon as she returned from Europe, she immediately started telling friends she was leaving again with Michael for the Caribbean and Mexico,

On February 2, 1977, the security guards at Sea Ranch Club helped Anne Sessa load her luggage into her new yellow Lincoln Continental. She told them she was "headed south" for a couple of weeks. Her son David, who lives in Illinois, recalls; "She said she was going to Caracas and then Mexico with Michael. She really seemed fascinated with him, he was a mysterious person, a financier."

More than two months later, on April 19, Dick Simpson, then a lieutenant in the Broward Sheriff's Office homicide section, receivGore, an attorney...called the Sheriff regarding his client, Mrs. Anne Sessa, 63, who is possibly missing. Mr. Gore, who handles Mrs. Sessa's estate, valued in the neighborhood of $500,000, stated his client has not been seen or heard from since early February and that her son, daughter and residents of her condominium...are concerned about her safety. She is rumored to have been going on a trip to Mexico and Geneva with one Michael Burnett, 2109 Middle River Drive...

Simpson contacted attorney Gore and Anne Sessa's friends at Sea Ranch Club. He discovered it was very unusual for her to be gone for so long without keeping touch with relatives and friends. She hadn't contacted attorney Gore about her taxes, which was also unusual for her, and she missed a maintenance payment on her condo, again very unusual. Simpson also learned Anne Sessa had told her friends she was leaving the country with Michael Burnett.

The next day, Lt. Simpson made an unannounced call at the large home on Middle River Drive. He knocked on the front door but didn't get a response. He walked around the house and encountered a stocky, roughhewn fellow standing by the pool. Simpson would later learn that it was Bobby Johnstone. He asked Simpson who he was. Simpson told him and then asked his name. Johnstone said nothing. He walked to a table, picked up a pen and wrote something on a plece of paper. He returned and handed the paper to Simpson, "This is my lawyer's name and telephone number," he said. 'If you have any questions, ask him."

Scratched on the paper was the name of Burton Levey. Simpson returned to his office and called Levey. No, Levey said, he didn't know exactly where Michael Burnett was. He was traveling somewhere in the country. No, Levey said, he had never heard of Anne Sessa. Yes, he would make an attempt to contact Burnett and have him call Simpson.

Simpson never heard from Burnett. When he got back in touch with Burnett's attorney, Levey sald Burnett did not want to talk with Simpson or anyone else about Mrs. Sessa.

That didn't surprise Simpson. By that time, he had been contacted by Fort Lauderdale homicide detectives and been told about Burnett's background.

Simpson discovered that Sessa had withdrawn about $20,000 from a savings account prior to her disappearance. Not only was all the jewelry she kept in her home gone, but so was the $250,000 worth of gems she kept in a bank safety deposit box. Bonds she kept in the same box were also missing. Simpson learned that Sessa called her broker at Merrill, Lynch and asked that all her municipal bonds and stocks handled by that firm, about $150,000 worth, be delivered to her home. The broker said she didn't give a reason.

Broward Deputy Sheriff Dick Simpson now believes that when Anne Sessa wrote to friends about Michael Burnett's "office" in Geneva, she was referring to a front called Kirtaube Establishment Vaduz. Originally, both he and attorney Gore thought Kirtaube was a bank because Shearson Haydon Stone told them that the securities she had transferred to its Geneva office went to an account at Kirtaube and from there were sold.

They discovered, however, that the Kirtaube's address was that of an attorney named Rolf Bracher. When Gore wrote to Bracher for information, he received a curt reply: "First of all, let me tell you that Kirtaube Establishment is not a bank, but a legal entity of Liechtenstein. This establishment, by the way, has been legally wound up. Furthermore...Mrs. Sessa is not my client. However, Kirtaube Establishment and its principal owner were my clients and...for reasons of professional secrecy, I cannot give you any information."

What happened to the proceeds of Anne Sessa's securities is yet to be discovered. What has been found is Sessa's yellow Lincoln Continental. It was abandoned at Miami's airport. According to a parking stub, it was put there the day after Sessa left her condo. There was no record at the Miami airport that she had purchased a plane ticket to anywhere.

Today, Dick Simpson says that one of the key stumbling blocks in his investigation was his inability to get the cooperation of the FBI and, through them, interpol, in order to pursue the foreign aspects of the case. The Broward Sheriff's file supports his contention. On the last page of BSO chronological reports. it is noted that an agent in the Fort Lauderdale FBI office was sent a complete copy of all reports on the Sessa case. That agent said he would contact his Washington office which, in turn, "would contact the Embassy in Switzerland in an attempt to ascertain information concerning Mrs. Sessa and the bond that was cashed in Geneva, and also any information concerning Mr. Michael Burnett, aka Michael Raymond. Investigation to be continued."

Although the FBI never told the Broward Sheriff's Office the results of any probe into Sessa's disappearance, it investigated the transfer of her stolen securities to ascertain if the Interstate Transportation of Stolen Property statute had been violated.

According to Chicago FBI agent Edward Hegarty, "The FBI investigation regarding the possible stolen Sessa securities concluded when the investigation determined that Sessa had personally appeared at a bank to cash in the bonds and her identity was verified by both photograph and signature." Hegarty added that since the bonds had apparently not been stolen before they were transported to Europe, "furisdiction did not exist to continue the federal investigation."

The FBI's assumption clearly is that the woman at the bank was Sessa, although it is not known if the FBI confirmed that separately.

The body of a woman who fit Sessa's description turned up in Geneva shortly after she was reported missing. The body was never positively identified.

TRACKING BURNETT

It is difficult to track Burnett's activities in detail after Sessa's disappearance. Links to him in shady deals pop up in New York, Chicago, Dallas, Switzerland and the British West indies. In fact, late in 1977, an affidavit filed in the New York Attorney General's Office charged Burnett with being a principal in a mysterious Netherland Antilles bank that seammed more than $10 million from investors. Somehow Burnett kept out of whatever legal holds local law enforcement authorities tried to put on him.

Burnett surfaced—under the alias Paul Fenton—in February, 1979, when he was arrested by the FBi in New York, charged with mail and wire fraud, and accused of swindling a number of people in Austria by exchanging worthless checks drawn on a non-existent bank for $1 million in African currency. He was remanded to the US Marshal's Office (the federal agency that administers the Witness Protection Program) and, in spite of his lengthy history, permitted to post ball. He immediately skipped town.

Three months later, The Miami Herald ran this modest headline: Slick Con Man Arrested at Miami International. Burnett—using a passport with the name of Myron Herbert Soinet—was arrested at MIA as he stepped off a plane from Nassau. He was charged with jumping bait, wire fraud and related crimes. The Herald reported that he was sent back to New York for trial. The report concluded, "He could receive 10 years in prison if convicted on the various charges."

George Gore, the Lauderdale attorney who has long been attempting to wrap up Sessa's estate, has made it his business to keep track of Burnett. Asked recently if he knew where Burnett is, he answered, "Yes. He's in jail in New York. They gave him eight years."

The Fort Lauderdale detectives who probed Stiles' disappearance, the Broward Sheriff's Office homicide investigators who handled the Sessa case, and even a couple of retired FBI agents who once worked Burnett and keep abreast of inside information through the Old Boy ex-agent network—all assumed Burnett was finally serving some substantial time in prison.

They were all wrong.

According to the Federal Inmate Locator Service, a centralized information system in Washington, DC, Burnett was sentenced to eight years in federal prison on June 28, 1979. He was not sent to prison until August 12, 1982.

it is difficult to determine where Burnett was and what he was doing between his sentencing and the start of his prison term. Information from a knowledgezble source indicates that he was again working as an FBI informant. He frequently called a friend in Miami and said he was in FBI custody in a special facility in Bergen County, NJ. He seemed to have freedom to come and go; the calls he made were always from the warden's telephone. Burnett bragged that he was the warden's private chef.

On December 16, 1983, only 16 months after he officially began his eight-year sentence, Burnett was paroled.

Federal parolees, Just like state parolees, must adhere to very stringent rules of behavior. One serious violation of parole would be getting arrested again for committing a felony. Another would be to have a criminal association with a convicted felon. To commit a felony in the company of a convicted felon would usually send a parolee back to lati

Unless the parolee is Michael Burnett.

ARRESTED IN NASHVILLE

In mid-summer 1984, burglary detectives of the Metro Police Department in Nashville, Tennessee, arrested two men who were preparing to rob a large home in Nashville's exclusive Belle Meade area. The tip about the burglary had come from the FBI through an informant in Chicago. The FBI said the burglars were specifically interested in securities and stocks which supposedly were kept in a safe in the home of the corporate president they were going to rob.

The Nashville police staked out the home. But the FBI agents said they didn't want to endanger the lives of the executive's family and insisted that the Nashville police arrest the would-be burglars when they stopped their rented van in a mall parking lot to make last-minute preparations. While it would have been difficult to prove that the men were about to commit a burglary, a state offense, the police and FBI agents discovered the men were armed when they pulled them from the van. They had an automatic pistol and an Ingram submachine gun with a stiencer. Possession of an unlicensed automatic weapon is a federal offense. And both men were on federal parole.

Considering their individual backgrounds, they were unlikely partners. One was a 34-year-old drug dealer named Alan Russell Varley. Charged in 1981 for importing cocaine, he had been given a 12-year sentence. Varley hadn't spent much time in prison before his parole. Neither had the other parolee with whom he was arrested: Michael Burnett.

Both men were charged by the state. State officials, unaware of previous links between Burnett and the FBI, thought it odd that the FBI Insisted that federal charges be filed and that the suspects be placed under federal custody. A Nashville police source said, 'The feds raised hell because they wanted them charged in a federal court. We couldn't figure out why. Finally, one of those guys before and they wanted to have control over him."

Varley and Burnett pled guilty to the federal charges on October 22, 1984. The docket Indicates that US Attorney Joe Brown is personally handling the case. A court clerk confirms that this is unusual. Burnett brought a new attorney to court: New York lawyer William Aronwald. When Aronwald requested that Burnett's bond be reduced from $250,000 to $50,000, the US Attorney did not object. Sentencing was set for December 3, 1984.

When contacted recently, Nashville burgiary detective Joe Blakely, who helped make the arrest, expressed surprise that Burnett was on the street again. The FBI had led him to believe that Burnett's bond had been revoked and he was serving a five-year sentence.

What actually happened appears to indicate that the Justice Department and the FBI went around local law enforcement to use Burnett for their own needs.

Reporter Kirk Loggins of the Nashville Tennessean said he got the impression from Nashville District Attorney Tom Shriver that the FBI had asked Shriver not to press state charges. "Once the federal people got into it," says Loggins, "he just completely got out of it. Shriver told me that the feds wanted to use this to force Burnest to help them on something else."

Loggins checked the state court record which, he said, indicated that both suspects had been bound over on weapons charges. "The clerk's office doesn't show they ever got out, but obviously they're gone," he said.

The federal court records were more revealing—at least for a while. They indicated that Burnett's sentencing date had been repeatedly postponed at the request of the US Attorney. However, the day after the Justice Department

"...obviously," said
Asst. US Atty. Connelly,
"the extent to which Burnett
cooperates with us
can't do anything
but help him."

learned Mlami/South Florida Magazine had been checking Burnett's records, a special order was added to the docket. The US Attorney suddenly requested that Burnett's file be placed under court seal and kept from public scrutiny.

There was yet another indication that the feds were again employing Burnett. Federal sources with access to a centralized information system in Washington suddenly refused to reveal if Michael Burnett was still listed. Obviously, the FBI had red-flagged the file, indicating that not only Raymond's name been expunged, but so was Burnett's. So now, as far as local law enforcement agencies could learn, the man had never existed as a federal criminal.

Such record shifting within a big bureaucracy can sometimes backfire.

The FBI was bound to notify the US Parole Commission that Burnett was arrested in Nashville in July, 1984. The Parole Commission, under its own policy, was bound to revoke Burnett's parole on the double violation of committing a felony with a convicted felon.

Yet, in a letter responding to an official request for information about Burnett's status, the Parole Commission admitted: "On July 12, 1984, the Parole Commission issued a parole violation warrant against Mr. Burnett. The current location of Mr. Burnett is unknown."

The federal agency officially charged with the responsibility of maintaining custody of a convicted felon doesn't know where he is. The Parole Commission's records show only that Burnett lists his home address as an apartment on West 84 St. in Manhattan.

It is in a nondescript six-story building in a fairly affluent neighborhood off West End Avenue. Burnett's name is printed on plastic tape on a mailbox in the vestibule. Our daylong on-site attempt to contact him there eventually provoked an angry response. A woman shouted from behind the double-locked door: "Go away! He doesn't want to talk to you!"

The attempt generated a telephone call early the next morning from William Aronwald, Burnett's attorney. He said he was aware of the attempts to contact Burnett. "The bottom line," he said, "is that he doesn't want to talk to you and he doesn't want to talk to the Fort Lauderdale Police and that's all there is to it."

Asked why Burnett had been uncooperative with the local law enforcement agencies, Aronwald said, "It wasn't that he was uncooperative. Each of us has a right not to talk with anyone we want. The thing you're talking about, as far as he's concerned, is ancient history."

Aronwald is a well-known and respected criminal attorney in New York, Before entering private practice, he was Chief of the Criminal Division of the US Attorney's Office in New York and was head of the Organized Crime Strike Force. Aronwald is very well aware of Michael Burnett's "ancient history."

THE CHICAGO STORY

Initially, The FBI and the Justice Department Ignored our efforts to determine Burnett's whereabouts. However, when a representative of the Miami FBI office was questioned about information we had developed, including our discovery of Burnett's Nashville arrest, the Burcau reacted quickly.

First to fly in for a meeting was Edward Hegarty, special agent in charge of the FBI's Chicago division.

Hegarty said Burnett was in his custody and was being used as the sting man in a major ABSCAM-type operation involving corruption among some of Chicago's ranking politicians and bureaucrats. Burnett was pretending to be the representative of a company attempting to get lucrative city fee collection contracts and making illegal payoffs to those who said they could help.

Those nibbling at the balt, liegarty said, included a Chicago alderman (equivalent to a city councilman), a department chief, a deputy department head, a former chief investigator, a few lawyers with political connections and a prominent businessman.

Next to visit was Assistant US Attorney Vincent J. Connelly, chief of the justice Department's criminal litigation division in Chicago and head of the investigation. He was accompanied by a Miami FBI agent.

The meetings were on the record.

Connelly said Burnett approached the FBI after his Nashville arrest and told the Bureau that he was involved in bribing public officials in Chicago, a city where Burnett had earlier plied his criminal career. (In fact, Burnett has long been acquainted with a few of the people he is now setting up.)

Connelly said the undercover use of Burnett was cleared by a group of Bureau and Justice officials who form the "Undercover Committee," an in-house watchdog panel created in reaction to Congress's strong criticism of the Abscam operation.

Connelly claimed no specific deal has been struck with Burnett in return for his cooperation, but arrangements have been made to postpone his sentencing in Nashville until the Chicago operation is wrapped up.

Nashville's US Attorney has the power to ask the judge for a lengthy sentence for Burnett, "But obviously," Connelly said, "the extent to which Burnett cooperates with us can't do anything but help him."

THE FBI'S RESPONSE

The decision that the FBI and the Justice Department would reveal their working relationship with Burnett to us was made at the highest levels of both the Bureau and justice in Washington. Assistant US Attorney Connelly said it was repugnant to them to reveal Burnett's involvement. "I'm doing it," he said, "strictly because I feel it's necessary to keep the investigation alive."

Thus, Burnett continued to work for the federal government. Using his talents as a gournet chef, he brought bribery investigation targets to his luxury apartment for lavish meals. They came, they dined, they talked, they took payoffs and they were video-taped. The government's grocery and liquor bills for Chef Michael's corruption kitchen, says the operation's chief, have been outrageous.

Pressed to explain the Bureau's relationship with Burnett, the extent of its Investigations, if any, into Burnett's involvement with the disappearances, and its cooperation, or lack thereof, with local law enforcement agencies, Hegarty sent a formal written reply to our questions. The reply, we were told, was cleared by top Justice Department officials in Washington.

"Burnett's prior criminal record and activities were known at the time it was decided to use him as an undercover operative;" special agent Hegarty writes, explaining that, "...lt is rare to find persons in a position to cooperate with federal investigators... particularly rare to find someone who is engaged in present corruption."

He states, "There was not (then)—nor is there now—sufficient information to link Burnett to the three...disappearances by even a preponderance of the available evidence, much less the standard that would apply in order to seek a successful prosecution..."

He notes, "At no time during the Chicago investigation has Burnett revealed, either knowingly or inadvertently, any information which is probative regarding the disappearances." And Hegarty adds, "through his attorney, Burnett has maintained his innocence regarding these unsolved disappearances."

The letter acknowledges, for the first time, that the FBI questioned Burnett about the disappearances of Bussard and Stiles shortly after they occurred. Hegarty writes that Burnett told the FBI he had 'no Information' about the whereabouts of either person or about Bussard's activities before he disappeared. The letter claims, "...the negative results of these interviews would not have aided the local law enforcement efforts to locate Stiles or Bussard."

Local police disagree. During its interrogations of Burnett, the FBI apparently did not have the intimate details of these cases possessed by on-the-scene investigators. Until now, local police were not informed that the FBI had ever questioned Burnett on these matters.

Hegarty confirms that the FBI had initial contact with an littormant who claimed direct knowledge of Burnett's involvement with the deaths of two of the missing South Floridians; the FBI does not identify the informant. Other information indicates that he was Ralph Rapp. The FBI now says it is ignorant of what Rapp revealed. Hegarty says only, "This individual was persuaded to discuss this matter with the appropriate police department and...was introduced to a police investigator who interrogated him/her, outside the presence of the FBI."

Hegarty states that, in terms of Burnett's possible involvement with the missing people, the Bureau "did not fail to disclose information or actively seek to hinder the resolution of those potential crimes by local law enforcement."

Local police records, however, show a lack of cooperation by the FBI and a deliberate reluctance to use the full force of its enormous resources to help solve the crimes. The records also clearly indicate that when the Bureau previously promised it would help, it did not follow through.

Only recently did the FBI furnish additional information from its files to Ft. Lauderdale police, whose investigation is still open. As long as they keep these three cases open, local police contend, there's the chance of a break.

UPDATE: BARBARA BISHOP

Just recently, Lauderdale detectives located someone they've been seeking a long time: Barbara Bishop, who was Burnett's secretary when he set up the front corporations in which Stiles and Bussard Invested.

One of the detectives noted that Bishop seemed to be expecting them. She opened the door immediately and never asked for identification.

She lives alone, except for a sadly scabby old dog, in a box-cluttered furniture-less apartment. She works at various telephone sales jobs and, she claimed, is barely getting by. Her Datsun 280ZX was going to be repossessed, she sald. Things went downhill for her after Burnett left town.

She claimed she didn't know Burnett was out of jail and said she wondered why the police would want to question her about anything. She said she never had any idea of any of Burnett's activities, only that he handled "investments." She said that's why he liked her. "I never bugged him or asked him a lot of questions about what he was doing," she said. "And I should keep my mouth shut."

She expressed surprise when told Adelaide Stiles had disappeared. Energy Resource Associates had closed down "about that time," she explained, and she returned to New York and waited four months before Burnett opened another South Florida firm.

Then, as if with a sudden realization, she asked, "Did something happen to Adelaide?"

Yes, she was told, "something" did happen to Adelalde.

Later, she quietly asked, "Did you find the body?"

The interview with Bishop continued for more than an hour of rambling conversation. She gave detectives other, more specific responses, which they won't reveal. Bishop eventually became defensive in the face of police questions and, at one point, she became angry.

angry.
"If you think I stood there and watched a man kill someone," she said, "you're crazy!"

Local detectives' current contact with Bishop adds one more piece to the puzzle of Michael Burnett and of the disappearances of Adelaide Stiles, Max Bussard and Anne Sessa. His lawyer said Burnett feels that what happened several years ago is "ancient history."

it isn't. o

What will it be? Stone crabs and Florida oranges for San Diego, or California citrus for Miami? Depends who wins this friendly wager.

Susan Golding, newly elected mayor of San Diego, is betting Metro-Dade Mayor Steve Clark and Miami Mayor Xavier Suarez that the Chargers will beat the Dolphins in Sunday's playoffs. (Miami is the 2 ½-point favorite by Las Vegas bookmakers.) If the Dolphins win, Golding promises to send Clark and Suarez a case of citrus, avocados and double-yolk eggs. If the Chargers win, Clark must send Florida oranges and Suarez says he'll ship stone crabs (from Monty's, since it's in Suarez's city.)

Mas on Mas Canosa

This month's issue of Esquire features a seven-page profile of influential Miami businessman Jorge Mas Canosa. The article, by Gaeton Fonzi, talks of Mas' distrust of reporters

"You will get all the misinformation that has been printed about me in the past. Then you will go talk with some of my enemies."). It talks of his role as chairman of the Cuban American National Foundation, his "clout in Washington." It quotes former State Department diplomat Wayne Smith: "This guy has assimilated the American political system better than anyone else ... He knows whom to intimidate, whom to buy, and how to make it work . . . " And it delves into Mas' bitter feud with The Miami Herald, which he considers biased against Cuban exiles. At an Easter Seal Society fund-raiser, where Mas and Herald Publisher David Lawrence Jr. agreed to disagree, Mas poked fun at Lawrence's efforts to speak Spanish on television, saying he looked like "a scared deer in the headlights of a truck" who might as well have used sign language. Says Lawrence, in Uruguay for a 10-day Spanish immersion course: "I'm not claiming to be an expert. I am ... using the language as my own sign of respect to other people in my community.

Cherry Hill Fats Rides Again

BY GAETON-FONZI

ABOUT A YEAR AGO, there began appearing in newspapers up and down the East Coast and as far west as Ohio this advertisement, or something similar to it:

PARTNER WANTED—Advertising, promotion, D & B rated firm with proven track record, Business too large to handle alone, Small cash investment required. Male or female but must be sales oriented. Call collect, (609) 067-5200, ask for Mr. Kaşe

In its very implication, the ad was deceptive. It was not placed by an individual looking for a partner to help run a booming business "with a proven track record" Rather, it was placed by a corporation called Golden Book Inc., the headquarters of which was ostensibly in a large office building at 1060 Kings Highway in Cherry Hill. Mr. Kaye was a phony named used by one of its front men.

Those who answered the ad would discover that their "cash investment" was really, in effect, the price to publish something called a "Golden Book of Value" in their particular aren. The Golden Book of Value consisted entirely of advertisements from local retail merchants, each offering a special discount on goods or services. The investor—or "publishee," as he would be called—was required, of course, to self the local merchants into advertising in the book and, for that, would receive a kick-back of 50% of the ad revenue. Once all the ads were sold, the publishee would receive 20,000 copies of the book, which he would then self to the public for $10, only $4 of which he would have to kick-back to the corporation. (The buyer of each book would receive a plastic card which he would present to each merchant who advertised in the book. For his $10, he could receive "up to $1500" worth of discounts.)

The figures alone are impressive. On an investment of $7500, a published could, if he sold all 107 pages of ads in the book and all

20,000 books, gross himself more than $190,000. (The Golden Book corporation itself, with less of a return on the $10 selling price of the book, could only gross about $150,000 maximum.)

The sales pitch used on prospective publishers was noi based on capital return alone. They were told that the Golden Book corporation would provide not only complete technical and mechanical services in setting up ads, providing proofs and printing the completed book, it would also give each publisher "complete training in all aspects of Golden Book sales and promotion"; it would send experts in to help sell the ads, if necessary; it would provide advertising and promotional material, billboards, displays and radio and television commercials and, in sum, provide the kind of total support that would guarantee the success of the venture.

Of course, prospective publishees were told, Golden Book was already a very successful operation "with a proven track record." As its ad said, it was "a D & B rated firm" and anyone with any doubt could check the actual Dun & Bradstreet report. There it was in black and white: "Sales July 1970 to Nov. 1970. $411,250. Annual sales are estimated at about $1,000,000.00." Now that's a proven track record, isn't it? DROX.

that's a proven track record, isn't it? pproX.

According to Dun & Bradsheel, the chairman of the board of Golden Book Inc. was a 50-year-old "sales motivation" expert named Ron. Kimball. No previous corporate affiliations are mentioned but, the D & B report notes, "Mr. Kimball has been in the field of sales and sales training for the last ten years . . . and . . . in the last 12 months. Mr. Kimball has devoted his full time and efforts in developing the concept of Golden Book."

Kimbull, a dark-haired, fast-talking Greek sharpie with a hint of a New England accent, would often take part in solling prospective publishess. Sometimes he would use an associate named James Sanford, a shifty-looking little guy with a bad complexion, to help him. Although it is not mentioned in the D & B report, both Kimball and Sanford were formerly associated with Koscot Interplanetary Inc., a Florida-based outfit that sold cosmetic franchises. (Roscot, accused of high-pressure and fraudulent sales techniques, was recently barred from doing business in both New Jersey and Pennsylvania.)

If Kimball and Sanford came across a particularly hot prospect for Golden Book, someone perhaps who could afford to buy more than one marketing area, they would fly him into Philadelphia, show him their headquarters, wine and dine him and put the pressure on. Then, if the prospect were still recalcitrant, they would take him to a large, sprawling ranch home at 306 Monmouth Drive in Cherry Hill and introduce him to a guy who was an expert at closing deals. Invariably, the prospect would be impressed, if only by the unbelievable size of the guy. This big man was introduced to some prospects as Sylvan Harry; others, who came from out of the area and were unlikely to be familiar with his background, were told his real name: Sylvan Seolnick.

There may be a question as to the element of fraud involved in the newspaper ads which Golden Book used to attract publishees. There is no question that the Dun & Bradstreet report referred to in the ads contained much that was misleading and derived from concocted information. Its total sales figures, its accounts receivable, its reported gross profits were, in effect, nothing but optimistic speculations with no indication that they came from uncertified statements,

However, the most misleading element in the report was the implication that those listed as the officers and directors of the corporation were responsible for its operation and direction. Although some publishees would later discover it themselves, a prospect investigating the potential of investing in Golden Book would never learn from its Dun & Bradstreet report that the man calling all the shots was none other than Sylvan Scolnick. Cherry Hill Futs himself.

In almost every way, Sylvan Scolnick is the epitome of the superlative. He is the most, He is undoubtedly the fattest, probably the shrewdest, unquestionably the most deceptive, perhaps the evilest and likely the most driven criminal conspirator in modern history. Ahhh, how that would burn him. He is also one of the most sensitive of men. He is frequently given to philosophizing on life and morality and often expresses a reverence for the verities of religious ideals. When he wants to, he can have you believe that he is the gentlest and most considerate of men, an extremely likable fellow. He is a master at selling himself.

Or anything else, as a matter of fact.

"Sylvan Scolnick of Cherry Hill is a salesman who could sell Mayor Lindsay the Brooklyn Bridge." once rhapsodized a newspaper phraseologist. Scolnick is such a good salesman because he is such a good liar. He is an inveterate and perhaps psychopathic liar. He has the rare capability of believing his own lies. "I remember once," says a former close associate, "Sylvan telling me he had been out testing a tractor-trailer truck that morning, describing how he maneuvered it, backed it up, rode it up and down over the hills. I could just see him picturing himself driving the thing and I was sitting there listening to him and believing him until all of a sudden I realized he couldn't even lift himself up to the first step of a truck. In fact, he couldn't even fit into the goddam cab!"

It is not known whether Sylvan Scoluick was born big. It is known that by the time he was 18, when he was arrested for the first time for selling baseball pool cards, he was a pimply-faced behemoth tipping the scales, as they say, at close to 300 pounds. He claims, for what it's worth, that he made up his mind to go into a life of crime when he was 29 after a doctor told him that he would probably soon die from a heart condition. The expense of just being fat was also a factor, he has said. "Anything I buy costs me five times as much as it costs anybody else. A $15 pair of pants costs me $75."

Like he did everything else. Sylvan Scolnick went into crime in a hig way. It was not known how hig until he himself became the most talkative stool pigeon Philadelphia law enforcers had ever grabbed. Yet what he revealed only hinted at the true scope of his criminal activity.

In his first venture into the big time, he set up his own father-in-law for a fraudulent bankruptcy. Morris Stein was a mild-mannered former upholsterer incapable of grasping the ramifications of his son-in-law's manipulations. Scolnick acquired a small general appliance store in the old man's name and began ordering truckloads of merchandise on credit. The stuff came in one door and wern out the other as fast as Scolnick could peddle it to various hot goods contacts around the country. He pocketed the cash and let M. Stein & Company's hills pile up. Within months after Morris Stein opened his store, he declared bankruptcy. Close to $700,000 in debt, he claimed he lost the money in gambling and to lonn sharks. (A former associate of Scolnick's who was involved in the frond says that at one point Scolnick, when he was afraid the old man wouldn't hold up under cross examination by federal investigators, was considering having his father-in-law bumped off. The old man did hold up and eventually wound up going to jail with Scolnick.) ?

However, the M./Stein & Company bankruptcy set the pattern for dozens of fraudülent bankrupteies over the next five years. With an expanding crew of front men, Scolnick made a business of buying small respectable retail outlets with good credit ratings, quickly ordering huge quantities of merchandise, getting rid of it through shally dealers, pocketing the cash and then sinking the business, usually all in the metter of months. Each bankruptcy was worth a few hundred thousand dollars. With his extremely facile mind, Scolnick was able to oversee the details of four or five operations at one time, although he never appeared as a principal in any one of them. Before the bubble burst, Scolnick had taken a multitude of creditors for at least a few million bucks.

Even the funtastic complexity of running a fraudulent bankruptcy ring wasn't enough to keep Scolnick's whirling dervish of a brain fully occapied. One of his fronts, a Camden firm wryly called Smith, Kline & Fender, became one of the largest conduits of second mortgage paper (installment notes generated by schlocky home repair, rooling and aluminum siding firms) to major local banks and finance companies. When former Inquirer reporter Harry Karalin discovered the bankruptcy fraud ring and tried to blackmail Scolnick, the fat man turned Karafin around and became an associate in the reporter's expanding shakedown racket. When arsonist Sid Brooks was arrested and $100,000 of his loot impounded by the federal government, it was Scolnick who masterminded the plan of stealing the money out of a bank's safe deposit box and then having Brooks sue the government for negligence in permitting the money to be stolen. It was Scolnick himself who engraved the plates for more than $2 million worth of phony American Express checks. It was Scolnick who defrauded millions out of insurance companies, banks and brokerage firms through various complex schemes involving arson, fraudulent loans and stock manipulation. There were few illegal activities that Sylvan Scolnick did not dip his cliubby fingers into.

In 1966, Scolnick was convicted in federal court of hankruptcy fraud and sentenced to five years in the Lewisburg prison. He had done everything possible to avoid conviction. He had feigned heart attacks and strokes and even put himself in a hospital for a few weeks (where he had associates smuggle in huge steaks and dozens of milk shakes). At one point, after he claimed he was too ill to walk, he was lifted onto a hand track and rolled into court.

Despite his conviction and sentence, Sylvan Scolnick spent very little time in a jail cell. Of course, jail is a special hell for a man as fut as Scolnick, a man who can't fit into a shower stall or wipe his own backside or rise from a chair without help or sleep on anything but a specially built bed or mattresses thrown on the floor. That's one of the reasons Scolnick became one of the gabbiest stool pigeons this town has ever heard. In addition, the Philadelphia district attorney's office uncovered his involvement in a number of arson and burglary jobs and was threatening to hit him with even longer prison sentences.

So Sylvan Scolnick spent a good deal of his prison time in the local offices of the PBI (he is still one of the Bureau's key informers and reportedly receives a regular government check) and in the City Hall offices of the district attorney finking on a beyy of underworld characters who once considered him a trusted cohort. He was the star witness in a few major cases, including the Harry Karafin trial.

It was during this time that insiders remember him holding royal court, as it were, in the unmarked backrooms of the district attorney's offices. Nurtured and fed by DA detectives (who would drive him to the comfort of his own home on weekends and even cut his grass), Scolnick regaled anyone who would listen with exciting tales of his criminal exploits. "Millions passed through my hands," he once said, "and that's the way I lived. The broads, the booze, the big cars, the paries down in Atlantic City, the trips to Vegas all went flying by Money didn't mean anything to me, it was just something to get when you needed it. Life was like a fast train."

Through those days of testimony and trials, a new Sylvan Scolnick was supposed to be emerging. Chastened hy his experience, the once-cocky criminal mastermind now became the reformed crook, "When I heard that clang of the door behind me at Lewisburg," he said, "it was the most depressing moment of my life. Prison degrades you, 'Oh my God Almighty, what have I done?'

I asked myself."

As if to show his sincerity, Scolnick even went on a dier. Where he once gulped down nine meals a day (a friend once saw him down 48 hamburgers in a sitting), he now called for an occasional salad and tea. By the time he was paroled in May of 1970, he was down to close to 500 pounds. A mere shell of his former self, he now blamed his criminal career on his obesity. "Being overweight made me try harder," he said. "I always had to do better. I tried to do better in crime. I think I succeeded, much to my dismay."

'CHERRY HILL FATS' HOME. ANNIOUS FOR NEW CAREER, headlined the Bulletin on his release. Ensconced on his rear patio, Scolnick said: "I tell you it's nice just sitting out here and smelling the grass and feeling the breeze. Do you know what it's like to go to the refrigerator and get a glass of juice?" He was a new man, he told reporters. He had learned his lesson, "The best thing that ever happened to me was going to prison," he chimed. "I feel mentally clean. I feel so clean—like a newborn baby!"

Sylvan Scotnick became one of the area's most soughtafter public speakers. He had more requests than he could accept. He told his audiences that crime doesn't pay and that no amount of money is worth one day in jail. He lectured on "How I Got Loused Up" and charged a fee of $50 a half-hour, which he donated to the Prison Chap-laincy Fond, Last November, when asked by a reporter how he was making a living, he said he was "putting it all together" in the advertising business. He traded under an agency name he declined to reveal, "Some people back away at the name of Sylvan Scolnick," he said. "I can understand that," But, he claimed, there were three reasons why he was a "better risk" than anyone else. "First," he said, "I can't afford any slips. Second, anything questionable I walk away from. Anyhow, number three, I my harder because I have more at stake."

The old Sylvan Scolnick was dead. Now there was a new Sylvan Scolnick, fresh, honest, wholesome and, well,

"clean-like a newborn baby!"

ABOUT THE MIDDLE of last August, Sylvan Scolnick received a telephone call at his house in Cherry Hill from a man named log. Spinelli, Here is part of the conversation:

"Hello, Syl?"

"Yeah."

"Guess who?"

"Joseph Spinelli?"

"Yeah!"

"How you doin', Joe?"

"I feel terrific. How do you feel?"

"Well, a little upset."

"I heard you had a fall over in front of Sam Rappaport's."

"Bad fall."

"How'd ya fall?"

"Well, you know, how do I fall? I'm not feeling well, my leg is bad, and it's pretty tough, me carrying my body around, you know. So I tripped and banged up the hip and I bruised up an arm and I almost broke it, and almost broke my right leg."

"When you go down, you must go down like a ton."
"Yeah. It's difficult for me to sit up and it's difficult for me to lay down and just problems with the weight and all.

And I'm just not feeling well, in general. So what's with you, foe?"

"Oh, I've been busy. I started a book to go into competition because I got pissed about the way things happened, not gettin' any money and all that, I was supposed to call Jimmy Sanford to meet with him and Rou Kimball and there was no answer. I get the answering service."

'Maybe they're out eating.'

"They said they'd be there. I got back from New York about 3:30 and before I called I found out something. How come you had Marvin pick up Phil Tannenbaum and book him?"

"I had Marvin do what? First of all, let me straighten something out so you understand. I had nobody do anything. I had nothing to do with anything. So anything you ask me about anything with them or with Ron or Jim, I don't know."

"Well, you paid for the furniture."

"Paid for what furniture?"

"Marvin's furniture."

"I paid for Marvin's ... ""

"When Marvin moved out . . . "

"Marvin told you that you could use the apartment, I understood, just until his lease. That was all he done."

"No, you said to me, even when I was in Florida, that you took care of the furniture, and you ..."

"I said that to you? That's a lie, that's a lie, Joe ..."

"Yeah, you said you paid him like $400 or $500 for the turniture. In fact, I even told ..." "That's a lie, foe, That's a lie, loe, foe, I never said any such thing to you, foe, Now that's a lie, That's not true, foe, You only had a place and, in fact, he even told you and I told you that his lease is only 'til August and he's getting married, 'cause then he's gonna use the stuff. That was it, you had a place 'til then. And then, if you wanted to, you could rent an apartment yourself."

"That's not what I was told, but that's beside the point.

Anyway, what's with the corporation?"

"With regard to what?" "Who has the stock? Jimmy?"

"Kimball, Jimmy, Anything with the company, Joe. listen, I been away from the company for some months now. I don't have anything to do with it, Listen, I'm not feeling well, it was too much running and this and that, just too much for me. I just couldn't handle it and you has too much for me. I just couldn't handle it and you know, I just couldn't take it. Joe, and that was all. So, if you want them, call the office or leave a number with the answering service or something,"

"Wait, since you had all the books and everything . . ."

"Who had all the books?"

"Svl, you did have them, Syl,"

"De, I didn't have no books! I don't have no books, and I'm telling you I'm not affiliated...."

"Syl, but all I want to know is. . . ."

"for, for, listen to me, for, . . .

"What?"

"Let me tell you again. . . ."
"You're acting very cool. . . ."

"Well, Joe, I'm acting cool because I don't feel that you're my friend, Joe. You understand? Now all I can do is just tell you what I know, and what I don't know. I have nothing to deny, Joe, one thing I'll say: I have nothing to deny, because my life is an open book at this nothing to deny, because my life is an open book at this point, my whole life. I have nothing to deny, nothing to hide, and I feel great about it."

"Then make me feel great and tell me what happened to the stock of the corporation."

"foe, I don't have any stock in no corporation."

"You're denying that?"

"I'm not denying anything, Joe. I'm telling you something. I'm not on no defensive. I'm making a statement of fact."

"I'm not trying to put you on any defensive. I'd just like to know what happened to 100% of the stock of the corporation that I incorporated."

"That's none of your business, Joe."

"None of my business?"

"No, how is it your business, foe?"

"Oh, you didn't offer $50,000 for 50% of that stock?"

"No, loe, loe, I never offered you snything."

"Are you trying to tell me you had nothing to do with this at all?"

"No, I'm not trying to tell you anything. I know exactly what transpired, and if you ever want to come over and sit down and talk...."

"You had nothing to do with Golden Book, you're telling me now?"

"loe, do you want me to hang up, or do you want me to talk?"

"No, I want to talk. Don't hang up,"

"Well, now, il you want me to talk to you, Joe, don't raise your voice. . . ."

"O.K., but...."

"You're being very argumentative with me. I thought you just called me to lind out how I feel. . . ."

"Yeah, I called up to find out how you feel, also, but I'd like to know what happened to the stock, because I think I'm due some kind of stock," (continued on page (36))

"Joe, listen. I haven't had anything to do over there, or with them, or anything, for some maybe three months. Joe, I'm not involved with it anymore."

"In other words you washed your hands completely of. . . .

"That's right, Joe. You're a pretty hip gny. You're nobody's fool, and what else can I tell you?'

"Syl, all I keep asking for is my stock in the corporation that I founded, that's all. And I keep getting the runaround. It's almost a year, Sylvan, it is a year, since it was incorporated.'

'loe, I never had any stock, in my name or out of my name."

"O.K., you're playing it very cool. I don't blame you for the position you're in."

"Look, Joe, do what you want, Tell me what, foe."

"O.K. All I want is my stock or some kind of money, that's all." "What stock, Joe?"

"Well, I had 100%, then it went to 50%...."

"Joe, you had 100%. Joe, and you signed. Aw, c'mon. Joe, how much money do you want, and let me tell them, and when they call me or if I hear from them....

Wait, wait. I'll tell you what. We'll say make it $50,000 and that is for 100% of the stock, because originally....

"Phew! You want $50,000 in eash? And you'll leave them alone?"

"I'll leave them alone."

"Awright, because I got nothing to do with them or Golden Book. I'm telling you now."

"Well, I'll believe you when you really step back."

"You think I'm kidding? I'm telling you I got nothing to do with it and have had nothing to do with it for some three months now. I'm not kidding. Look, let me tell them what you said, you want $50,000 and you'll leave them alone."

"In the meantime, I'll try and call them."

"All right, I'm gonna tell them you want 50 grand and you'll leave them sione. You'll stop bothering them, O.K.?"

"The only person that I can turn to would be you, who I originally dealt with."

"Joe, I'll tell you this, Joe. You've been a friend of mine, you've always been a friend of mine. I always counseled you as my friend. And I've always thought that you were close to me. I always thought, above unything else, I could trust you. You hear?"

"Yeah."

"But I'll tell you something, Joe. As far as I'm concerned, if they owe you anything, or there's something that's supposed to be, you can rest assured that I'll be on your side, loc. Now I've fold you that always before. I told you that before when Jimmy told me that you called him up and you quit, I couldn't believe it. And do you remember you called me on the phone and you said to me, 'Are you ready to talk to me now? You know, with regard to money and stock for the company? And I said. Joe, come over and see me, Joe, and I'll make some kind of arrangements for you." But you didn't want to listen and you hung up on me. Now you're coming up with a figure-you want $50,000? Let me tell him, Meanwhile, call him at the office. I'm positive they'll be back."

'All right."

"All right, Joe, take care, babe, and listen. Joe. Joe, do what's right, loc. I'm telling you, Joe."

"Sylvan, I'm not out to hurt anybody."

"Joe, do what's right. . . ."

"I will. . . . ?"

"Don't do nothing you ain't supposed to, Joe. And, Joe. please, do me a favor, and don't break the law, foe."

RIGHT NOW, SYLVAN SCOLNICK IS running-liguratively, of course-like hell. He is running scared. He is running to get away from any involvement with an unusual company that happens to be located in his hometown of Cherry Hill.

Sylvan Scolnick knows that if the extent of his association with that company were ever revealed, there is a dama good possibility that he will go back to jail. Above all else, Sylvan Scolniek does not want to go back to jail.

That's why Sylvan Scolnick now says he has nothing to do with the company. He was merely its "advertising consultant." He was never the one who had control, never the one who charted its financial manipulations, never the one who directed its convoluted operations, never the one who called the shots. Not Sylvan Scolnick, It is irrelevant, according to Scolnick, that all the complex wheeling and dealing that has so far characterized the direction of the company bears the hallmark of one of the shrewdest con men of our time.

He is absolutely amazing, Sylvan Scolnick is. Closely watched by a federal parole agent, constantly in touch with both local and national law enforcers, cooperating on a regular basis with the FBI, and all the while proclaiming the absolute necessity of conducting himself beyond a shadow of suspicion, Sylvan Scolnick was nevertheless the engineer of a corporate vehicle that might have taken him right back into the big time. Life once again might have been as he put it, "like a fast train." It might have been.

Strangely enough, Sylvan Scolnick once said that his favorite quotation was from John Greenleaf Whittier: "For all sad words of longue or pen, the taddess are those "it might have been."

EARLY IN 1969, when Sylvan Scolnick was still in jail, Joe Spinelli had an idea. Spinelli was 38 then, a frizzly-haired personable little guy who had been in advertising sales all his life. Originally from Philadelphia, he had been living along the North Jersey shore, in Ocean County, for a number of years. It was there that he decided to first put his idea to work.

Spinelli knew that retail merchants have a problem judging the effectiveness of any particular advertising medium, whether it may be newspapers. magazines, radio or television, just how many customers does each ad attract? If he could devise an effective, inexpensive form of advertising that would provide merchants with proof of each sale's source. Spinelli felt he would have a winner. Thus evolved the concept of Golden Book, According to official records in the Ocean County Clerk's Office, Spinelli, with his wife and brother-in-law, formed a limited partnership known as Golden Book, Golden Book of Values, Ltd., in April of 1969.

Spinelli figured that each marketing area of 200.000 people could support a Golden Book published once a year. He deliberately kept the cost of each full-page ad—$82.50—to a minimum so that the company had to make almost all its profit on circulation, thus assuring merchants of adequate distribution and giving validity to the book as an effective advertising concept.

Spinelli published his first Golden Book---actually, a chunky three-by-five-inch booklet—late in 1969. By a number of measures, it was a success. He had sold 107 pages of advertising and the sale of the book itself to consumers was going well. Yet within a matter of months Spinelli found himself in a financial jam. He had been undercapitalized from the beginning and his accounts receivable weren't coming in fast enough. In addition, he Montgomeryville, Ps. Where Rte. 202 meets 309 - Phone 643-4566 Oarly 9.30 to 5 . . . Mon. , Wed., Fri. titt 9 was pouring money into trying to get another book off the ground in Monmouth County. And, on top of it all, he was having domestic problems that eventually ended in a divorce. He soon hit a low point in his life. His car was repossessed and a couple checks bounced.

But he still had faith in the concept of Golden Book and, in the back of his head, plans for its expansion. He figured the country could be divided into more than 900 marketing areas capable of supporting a Golden Book and, given enough money and time, he could establish them one at a time.

Time is what Spinelli had; money is what he went looking for. Through a series of contacts and referrals, Spinelli eventually was told to get in touch with a deal-maker in Philadelphia by the name of lack Shapiro. In and out of a variety of fast-buck operations over the years, Shapiro was making a living putting people with money together with people looking for money and collecting a "finder's fee" for his services.

Shapiro, a bandy-legged little guy with a rubbery smile, was once in business with a man named for Py. They dealt in second-mortgage paper, much of it of questionable legitimacy generated by suede-shoe home repair salesmen and loan consolidators. That's what brought them a visit from former Inquirer reporter Harry Karafin, who shook them down for $5000. At the time, however, they didn't know of the connection between Karafin and Scolnick, whom they knew only us a fellow dealer in secondmortgage paper. Later, Shapiro was, with Scolnick, one of the key with nesses against Karafin.

Just before Joe Spinelli contacted him in July of last year. Shapiro had gotten a cull from Sylvan Šcolnick. Scolnick told him that he had met a guy with just enough brains, a plumber named Marvin Abrams, whom he was thinking of using as ay front for an operation called Mr. Tuffy. This was a gimmick-based home-repair company which, for a "membership" charge of $10 n year. would guarantee 24 hour service on emergency repairs. Scolnick told Shapiro that he eventually wanted to get into franchising, where the money is, and that Mr. Tuffy might be a legitimate vehicle.

When foe Spinelli came to Shapiro looking for capital to expand his Golden Book operation, Shapiro remembered Seolnick's call and thought the fat man might see the same framchising potential in Golden Book. He decided to take Spinelli to 306 Monmouth Drive in Cherry Hill.

"When I lirst saw him, my God!" says Spinelli. "I remember the circus when I was a kid, but I never saw anyone that big!" Scolnick had just gotten out of his pool and was standing there in a tent-sized white robe. Spinelli, having been out of the Philadelphia area for years, didn't know that Scolnick was a very unusual man in more ways than one. "We sat down and I rold him all about Golden Book," recalls Spinelli, "He took shorthand notes of everything I said. He asked me how much money would be needed and I said I figured about $50,000. He asked how much of the company I would be willing to give up for that and I said half. He said, O.K., it's a deal.' We also agreed that Shapiro would get 10% as his finder's fee. But, he said, we couldn't go anywhere until I got the company structure changed from a limited partnership to a corporation. I said I would do that."

Records in the office of the secretary of state of New Jersey show that Golden Book Inc. was incorporated by Joseph M. Spinelli on August 17, 1970.

A few weeks later, Spinelli had his second meeting with Scolnick. This time, however, it was not at Scolnick's Cherry Hill home but in the nearby offices of a firm called Intercontinental Sales Corporation. That, it has since been discovered, was an aborted operation set up by Koscot to push its "Supercharge" credit card. The president of Intercontinental was James H. Sanford. According to an old news release from Intercontinental. Sanford formerly served as president of Tri-State Lending and Financing (the corporate front that Scolnick used as his central command post while running his bankruptcy fraud ring was called Twin-State).

Sanford was present at this second meeting of Spinelli and Scolnick, as was the man who would later become "house counsel" for Golden Book, a Camden attorney named Everett L. tones. (Scomick had previously used Jones while running his Smith, Kline & Fender operation.) It was at this meeting that Spinelli first got an undication that Scolnick was planning to bring other people into the Golden Book deal. "He and Sanford began using code names for guys they knew. guys they said we 'absolutely' needed in the operation. Later Scolnick told me that we couldn't make the deal unless we brought them in. I found out later they were friends of San-

He said, 'Don't worry, we'll have a letter written between us so that only you and I will have the voting power.'"

The deal was scheduled to be consummated one night late in August of 1970 in Sylvan Scolnick's home. "It was hectie," Spinelli reculls, "More people were going in and out of that place than I could count. It was just so hectic, all of these wheelers and dealers coming and going and talking about dozens of different things. I had the feeling I was in the office of some big corporate business executive, with all the truffic he had. It was about 2 o'clock in the morning before we got around to our deal and then he started me signing all these papers and corporate transfers. Meanwhile it kept getting later and later and the stock certificates were supposed to be made out and the letter about control written and signed, but we kept getting interruptions and people kept coming and going until finally Sylvan says, 'It's getting late and I'm getting tired, so why don't we finish it up tomorrow.' Tomorrow never did come."

At the time, Spinelli had no reason to be suspicious of Scolnick. Weeks later, when be did find out about his background-one night in passing conversation, Scolnick happened to mention something about life in prison-Scolnick told him what he told every other person he made deals with: that he was a better risk because he had more to lose, that he was watched too closely to do anything wrong, and that he had to do everything legitimately and completely above suspicion because he was not only on federal parole but also under a 30-year probationary sentence. Who would believe that Sylvan Scolnick could be anything but honest?

Spinelli wouldn't realize it until months later, but what Scotnick did that very busy night at his home was take the Golden Book corporation completely out of his hands. Because it wasn't long after that night that a Certificate of Change of Agent for Golden Book Inc. was filed in Trenton. The new agent was a Camden lawyer named Gene Haeberle, another attorney Scotnick had used in the past. Authorizing the change of agent was the apparently new president of

Golden Book: Mary Abrams, the plumber.

One of the hallmarks of any Sylvan Scolnick operation is the multiplicity of characters he uses in a variety of roles. He is a master factician who makes maximum use of the people around him, pulling them in and out of operations, superimposing and duplicating their functions and positions to create as much confusion as possible. Mary Abrams, for instance, was made president of both Mr: Tuffy and Golden Book. A young secretary named Theresa Cipriano, the daughter of one of Scolnick's mother's friends. was made corporate secretary of the same two firms, Sylvan Scolnick, who has a lough time moving around himself, has made a schrick out of manipulating people.

To BET GOLDES BOOK'S corporate ship steaming immediately shead at full speed, Scolnick got Im-Sanford, Ron Kimball and Fred Maroon to contact all of the monied prospects they had known from their Koscot days and invite them to a two-day "seminar" at the Cherry Hill Lodge. There Joe Spinelli would offer them the opportunity to get in on the ground floor of a fantastic new advertising concept that would make them all wealthy.

That two-day sales pitch was held over the Labor Day weekend in 1970. It did produce some results in that a few prospects did sign up as Golden Book publishees, but Spinelli remembers it mostly because a couple of things happened that gave him an indication there was more behind the scenes than Scotnick had told him. First, at one point during the seminar, all the prospects were loaded onto a bus and driven across the Delaware and up to Downingtown where they were given a demonstration of dune buggies. What, Spinelli wanted to know, did dune buggies have to do with Golden Book? Nothing, he was told, it was just something that Sylvan was interested in.

The other strange occurrence that weekend involved lim Sanford. He disappeared. Spinelli asked about him early on the first morning and was told by Ron Kimball that Sanford wasn't feeling well and had gone home. Sanford didn't show up that afternoon or the next day and Spinelli was told that he still wasn't feeling well. What Spinelli wasn't feeling well. What Spinelli wasn't told until much later was that Sanford had gone to jail to begin a sixmonth sentence for a $50,000 check kiting scheme. Despite Sanford's incapacity. Scolnick kept him on Golden Book's payroll at $1000 a month all the time he was in jail.

(The relationship between Scotnick and the boyish-looking Sanford is interesting. Sanford is something of a protégé of the fat man and Scolnick takes an almost paternal concern for Sanford's well-being. "Sylvan tried like hell to keep him out of jail," says a friend, "and even after he went in he pulled strings to get him transferred to a model federal prison in Florida. When Sanford called on the day he got out, Sylvan cried like a baby, he was so happy," Sanford, who now calls himself the president of Golden Book, had never been in jail before, although his arrest record includes convictions for robbery, forgery, fraud and passing worthless checks.)

That Labor Day weekend seminar marked the opening of the throttle of Golden Book's operations under Sylvan Scolnick's aegis. Although Scolnick today claims he was never instrumental in the direction or operation of the company-he was always just a "consultant"-there is more than sufficient evidence to prove differently. Until a few months ago, when it became apparent to Scolnick that he had gone a bit too far and the whole thing was about to blow up in his face, Golden Book's command post was not at its official offices in a building at 1060 Kings Highway, but at 306 Monmouth Drive - Sylvan Scolnick's home. (Even one of the telephones now located in Golden Book's offices was transferred from Scolnick's house.)

One of the first things that Scotnick did to facilitate his operational control of Golden Books was to get Spinelli out of the picture by sending him away to sell publishing areas and conduct sales seminars up and down the East Coast. Then he began to move. He had a huge addition built onto his already very large house, had it paneled and decorated and brought over furniture for it from the offices of the defunct firm that Sanford headed, Intercontinental Sales. Then, through Golden Book. he ordered hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of printing and duplicating equipment and had it all delivered to his house, tincluded in the equipment, some of which is still not paid for, were IBM typewriters. an IBM Composer, a Verityper, Xerox copiers, an Addressograph-Multigraph Headliner, and a Roneo mimeograph.) He also ordered, through Executive Leasing, two new

If you're a young professional, take a minute to learn how you can get the life insurance coverage you need for only 20% of the actual premium.

It sounds "gimmicky" but it's no more than sound financial planning.

Let's say you're an intern or a young lawyer who wants $75,000 worth of life insurance for the next five years. At this point in your career, that much insurance might be financially impossible, so we have a plan:

You pay nothing now and nothing for the next five years -absolutely nothing! We simply borrow your premium from a reputable bank. At the end of five years you have a choice. You can pay the premium back to the bank in thirty-six instalments and keep your policy in force-or you can take the cash value your policy has accumulated and use that to pay off your premium. It will actually cover about 80% of the total premium due; leaving you a balance of only 20%-peanuts!

Not to mention the tax benefits if, at that time, you find yourself in the 30% to 40% tax bracket-a strong possibility.

We'll be happy to discuss this plan with you; and "tickled pink" to compare it with any other life insurance program going.

Lincoln Continentals, (Later, when Sanford got out of jail, he would also get one.)

Then he began bringing in some of his old cronies, among them a very sharp bookkeeper who went by the name of Rose-Jacoby. A big Oriental-looking woman, Rose Jacoby used to work for Scolnick during the heyday of his bankruptcy fraud ring and his Smith, Kline & Fender operation, Her real name is Pat Oxinio talias "Filipino Pat"). Before she got into bookkeeping she was a prostitute.

Another crony regularly around Scolnick's house was a husky, darkhaired guy named Jack Secouler, One of the fat man's top sidekicks in his bankruptcy ring, Secouler was convicted with Scolnick and spent nine months in federal prison. The connection between Scolnick and Secouler (who sometimes calls himself Bruce Casino) is still very close. Once, when Scolnick sent a group of salesmen out to sell publishing areas for Golden Book in Ohio, he gave one of them a Humble Oil credit and on which to bill their expenses. They ran up close to $500 in bills. Their tab, however, was never billed to Golden Book. It was billed to the 783 Liquor Store, a dive in the heart of Camden's ghetto. The 783 Liquor Store is run by Jack Secouler.

Such interlockings, although infrequently revealed, are like glimpses of the tip of Scolnick's operational iceberg, Although Secouler, for instance, was in no why connected with Golden Book-except for an association he had with an officer in the firm's bank, Fidelity Bank & Trust of Pennsauken-Scolnick appears to have used him as a conduit in one of the many circles of cash flows he was spinning. Thousands of dollars of Golden Book checks were for some mysterious reason endorsed to Secouler's liquor store, A former associate believes that Scolnick is behind that operation also.

Meanwhile, Sylvan Scolnick had convinced Joe Spinelli to go on the road selling publishing areas without a salary. That would be in the best interests of the corporation for now, said Scolnick, because every cent was needed to get the operation off the ground. In lieu of a salary, Scolnick told Spinelli that he would make sure the monthly payments on his new car were made and that regular support payments would be made to his former wife.

With slick salesmen following up the leads from inquiries to its "Partner Wanted" ads, Golden Book's coffers soon began to fatten. And Sylvan Scolnick was the guy in charge of what went in and what went out. As corporate secretary, Terry Cipriano would sign at his behest pages of checks in advance. And if Mr. Tully-Golden Book president Mary Abrams wasn't around to sign the checks. Scolnick never hesitated to forge Abrams' signature. (Witnesses, in fact, say that Scolnick would even brag about his talent for forgery, although one official handwriting expert, after comparing one signed document against Abrams' signature on his recent marriage license, said the forgery was obvious.)

Despite the fact that his partner Spinelli was out pounding the hustings without a salary, Scolnick himself made ample use of Golden Book funds for both himself and his cronies. Not only were they driving around in expensive cars, they also drew out fat sums in salaries or expenses. (After Sanford got our of jail, he rented a home for his family close to Scolnick's. The owner of the house says he has received Golden Book checks from Sanford as rent payments.) An earnings statement for the first three months of operation listed payroll expenses at close to $12,000, travel and entertainment at $6600 and "consultants" fees at $20,145.

Although Scolnick frequently mounted to Spinelli about the linancial strain of getting a new corporation off the ground, he didn't seem to find it necessary to tighten his own belt. He continued to wine and dine in the manner to which he was accustomed, ofttimes ordering lavishly from one of his favorite restaurants, a plush spot called Henry's, near the Garden State Race Track. (According to the bills at Henry's, Scolnick's favorite late-night snack was three dozen fried shrimp. All the bills are charged to Golden Book, most are marked "Hold for Sylvan." When Philadelphia Magazine began its investigation-after Scolnick claimed he was no longer associated with Golden Book-Henry's had more than $600 worth of outstanding bills against Golden Book. When a representative of Henry's called Scolnick and told him of the magazine's inquiry. Scolnick immediately sent Jim Sanford over to pay off the debi-in

In addition, despite Scolnick's contention that Golden Book's working capital situation was very tight, he somehow was able to have Golden

Book make very large loans to two other corporations: Alpha & Omega Inc. and Mr. Tuffy Inc. (Alpha & Omega appears to be Scolnick's first venture after he got out of jail. Principally, it was a mobile billboard business, although its only known clients are Golden Book and Mr. Tuffy.)

THROUGH IT ALL, Sylvan Scolnick's main concern was to keep himself as far in the background as possible. A corporation run by one of the biggest con men of all time might have difficulty attracting investors and even creditors. (When Mary Abrams once naïvely reported to the company insuring the Mr. Tuffy trucks that one of them was parked in front of 306 Monmouth Drive, the company immediately dropped the insurance, and Executive Leasing, which rented out both the trucks and Golden Book cars, cancelled all contracts until another insurance company was found.) Although a few potential investors from outside the Philadelphia area were introduced to Scolnick by his real name, most were never told that he was the key figure behind Golden Book operations, According to the Dun & Bradstreet report to which the company's salesmen referred potential investors and which, in fact, they used as a very effective sales tool, Golden Book's chairman of the board was Ron-Kimball; its president, Calvin Lamb; its vice president and treasurer, Herbert Pasker; and its directors Alan-Shapiro and Herbert Pasker.

From men. As noted, no mention is made in the D & B report of Kimball's previous affiliation with Koscot, and without that reference Kintball makes a safe enough top man. Herb Pasker is a printer with a small operation in North Philadelphia whom Scolnick brought in to do the actual printing, Scolnick wanted someone close by who would be able to come to his house when called. Pasker had dealt with Scolnick previously and was owed money by him, but Scolnick told him he would make up the debt, and more, in the Golden Book deal. "When he asked me to become vice president I said O.K.," says Pasker, "because I figured as on officer of the company I was less likely to be shafted of any money due

The president of Golden Book according to Dun & Bradstreet was not Mary Abrams but Calvin Lamb, a young black man whose pliability Scolnick seems to have immediately recognized. He was a free-lance artist and a friend of Pasker's. "The guy was out of a job and I asked Sylvan whether he could help him out," recalls Pasker, "He made him president of Golden Book." (Lamb, at this point in Philadelphia Magazine's investigation, cannot be found. His wife, very concerned, says he hasn't been home in several weeks. Neither has be appeared at Golden Book's offices. At one point he told a friend that he was getting worried about all the papers Scolnick was having him sign without telling him what they were.)

Alan Shapiro (no relation to aforementioned Jack Shapiro), listed as a director of Golden Books, heads a Philadelphia advertising and public relations firm, "Herb Pasker called me one day," he recalls, "and briefed me on what was supposed to be the resurrection of Sylvan Scolnick. He said that Golden Book had to be a legitimate operation and Scolnick wanted a legitimate public relations agency to handle it." Shapiro says that Scolnick led him to believe that he was the majority stockholder in the corporation. There is no doubt in his mind, he says, that the fat man controlled its operation. He says he spent a good deal of time in Scolnick's home discussing advertising and public relations programs, "I cleared everything with him directly," says Shapiro.

Like most of those Scolnick conned into the deal, Shapiro wound up with little more than promises. He eventually withdrew from involvement with the corporation, lack of payment being only one of the reasons.

Was he aware, he was recently asked, that he is still listed as a director of Golden Book? "Still?" he replied. "I was never a director. They asked me once but I refused. That report is absolutely false."

ONE OF THE principal elements of deception—and perhaps even legal fraud—involved in its operation of Golden Book was its use of a Dun & Bradstreet report that was both misleading and lacked full disclosure. It was this report that was used by its salesmen to con prospects into buying publishing areas and to attract prospects through interstate advertising.

The original report issued by Dun & Bradstreet was dated February 10th, 1971. Sales were reported at $500,000 and total current assets at $123,000, including $109,000 in accounts receivable. By April 28th, 1971, the report had been revised and sales were reported to top the $1 million mark and total assets had climbed to $355, 903, including $233,000 in accounts receivable.

Golden Book appeared to be one of the hottest new companies to come along in some time. "Net worth exceeds total debt, finances are in good condition," chimed the report.

What the report does not say is that the rosy picture it relates was based on completely unconfirmed financial figures that were concocted by the fat man running the corporation. (The report, of course, does not even mention the fact that Cherry Hill Fats is associated with Golden Book.) The report says simply that the statement was submitted by Harold Weinberg, C.P.A., of the accounting firm of Stein, Weinberg and Winderman.

Although Weinberg is credited with the statement, the liaison between Golden Book and Dun & Bradstreet was Weinberg's partner, Stanley Stein, Also introduced to Scolnick by lack Shapiro, Stein became very friendly with the fat man and was frequently at his house. Stein admits that he was the contact with Dun & Bradstreet for Golden Book, and a D & B representative confirms that Stein was the Golden Book spokesman.

At the very least, there may be some serious questions surrounding the role of Certified Public Accountant Stanley Stein with Dun & Bradstreet. Stein was certainly aware of the contents of the D & B report and the picture it painted of Golden Book's personnel structure and financial situation. Stein, however, permitted the report to be promulgated with its significant misrepresentations.

Although personally questioned by Don & Bradstreet investigators about the operation of Golden Book, Stein never mentioned Sylvan Scolnick's involvement with it. ("To my knowledge he wasn't involved," Stein insists today, "He was a consultant at one time.") Neither did Stein make any attempt to correct the mistaken impression that the financial statistics in the report were based on hard realities.

In defense, Stein points to a covering letter which his firm attached to the financial statements it prepared for Golden Book. There is nothing, however, to indicate that Dun & Bradstreet was ever aware of such an attached qualification. The letter was addressed to the "Board of Directors, Golden Book Inc." and it made two critical observations.

Come see a car with an engine in the front, the back, and the middle.

The car with the engine in the front is called the Audi.

It stops differently, turns differently, moves differently, even uses gas differently than just about every other car in the world. (Sixty-one years of German engineering experience has taught us a few things.)

The car with the engine in the rear is the Porsche 911.

A true classic in sports cars. And a classic in engineering. In fact, over the past twenty-one years Porsches have proven to be so well engineered, so precise, that they've won more than one thousand major races.

And the car without an engine in the front or the back is the Porsche 914.

We put the engine in the middle so the 914 would hold the road better, corner surer, and brake smoother than almost any other car.

We'll be glad to show what our cars look like in real life. We're very proud of them.

And we'll show you something we're even more proud of than the way they look:

The way they work.

And:

"The scope of our examination was inadequate to permit the expression of an opinion on the statements as a whole."

In order for Golden Book to gross more than $1 million in sales—as the Dun & Bradstreet report claims it was doing within five months of its incorporation—about 100 publishing areas would have had to have been sold and paid for, each publishee would have had to sell a complete book of advertising, and each publishee would have had to sell all 20,000 copies of each book (the number of books the corporation said it would provide each publishee in its original agreement) and return Golden Book's percemage of the sale.

Obviously, Cherry Hill Fats even dreams big dreams. As of two months ago, the total number of Golden Book editions that printer Herb Pasker says he printed was six. (Only two of those went to the full 20,000 run; two had a 10,000 run and two only a 5000 run.)

WHAT HAPPENED TO ALL the other investors who bought publishing areas from Golden Book? (Spinelli estimates that there may have been 75 who signed published agreements.) In almost all cases, absolutely nothing has happened. They are still waiting for Golden Book Inc. to fulfill its promises to train, supervise and provide them with advertising and promotion support to sell ads in the book. "They promised all kinds of things but didn't deliver," said a Florida investor. "They told me they had some big-name singer going to do the commercials and they had another big name doing this or that and, man, they were just blowing a lat of smoke, a lot of smoke."

A good many publishees have attempted to get their investment returned, but even those who bought early and whose agreements had a 30-day buy-back clause (a feature that Scolnick later dropped from Spinelli's original forms) were stalled until the clause expired. "I don't know what I can do now," said an exasperated investor who feels he was taken. "I don't have the money to fight them."

King of Prossia - Norristown - Willow Brank Travaso - Alleniann tire concept of Golden Book's operation has been changed. As written by Spinelli, the original agreement between Golden Book and each publishee provided that the corporation would deliver 20,000 copies of the book after all its ads were sold and it was printed. Golden Book would make the bulk of its profit from the sale of those books, which would sell to consumers at $10 a piece. That was the most important point in helping publishees sell ads to merchants, because no ad is effective unless it is distributed.

Judging from its record so far, Golden Book's primary concern now is not whether any books are ever published and distributed. Scolnick and his cohorts, Kimball and Sanford, are really only interested in selling publishing areas because that is the principal source of their "from money," cash acquired without really providing any goods or services.

Certain other changes were recently made to insure more front money for Golden Book whether or not any books were printed. The price of a publishing area was raised from $5500 to $7500, the cost of each ad was hiked from the nominal $82.50, which Spinelli originally charged, to $195, and the number of ads that each publishee was required to sell was raised from 107 to 115.

Thus the Golden Book corporation would wind up with more than $20,000 in from money for each area sold before it printed a single book.

Although, according to the agreement that each publishee must sign, Golden Book "is possessed of the knowledge and experience to publish the book and to supply training and knowhow to secure ads for said publication," today only a minimum of effort is devoted to actually helping publishees get out a product. That's why, despite the fact that so many areas have been sold, only a handful of books have been published.

In addition, to speed up the flow of front money coming into the corporation, the accent has been shifted to a sales technique that Kimball and Sanford had seen used so effectively in the Koscot operation. It is called "pyramid franchising." In Goldet. Book's case, it means being less concerned with helping a publisher turn out a product than in getting him interested in selling other franchises. That's where the front money is. The name of the game is keep the congoing.

the con going, Sylvan Scolnick is the greatest. (An especially interesting example is the case of one local publishee who, after having bought two areas, learned that Cherry Hill Fats was involved and irately demanded his money back, Scolnick not only sold him into not taking any action until his 30-day buy-back clause had expired, he also talked him into accepting the title of National Director of Publishee Sales and convinced him he could make more money selling other areas than he could as a publishee. Now the guy admits he was conned by Scolnick.)

Scolnick was going to take the con all the way to the top. He reached the point where he was discussing with a New York lawyer plans for a public offering of Golden Book stock. Considering the full disclosure clauses in the Security & Exchange Commission laws, that would have taken a lot of chatzpah. (Despite the fact that Scolnick was claiming he was out of the Golden Book picture, that New York attorney visited hint less than three months ago.)

There were other problems. A few of Scolnick's associates began to see what was going on around them. Alan Shapiro, for instance, decided to step out when he realized the basic deception in Golden Book's altered concept. "They became more interested in selling publishees than in helping publishees sell," he says.

Even a former Koscot man like Fred Maroon found Sylvan Scolnick's machinations too tough to swallow. "I found him a personable, likeable individual but he just didn't do business the way I thought was proper. And I'm not talking about his past now. I'm talking about the present."

Maroon, in fact, hadn't known about Scolnick's past. He had been working with Jim Sanford at Koscot headquarters in Florida and had been convinced by Sanford to come up and join the Golden Book operation. "I knew Jimmy real well down here." says Maroon, who is back in Florida today, "but I didn't know anything about limmy or the people he knew up there. I knew him real well down here and when you know someone real well you don't do a lot of quizzing or ask a helluva lot of questions. So I got to know Sylvan as just a real colorful character. I guess I still don't know a for of things that so many people up there know. I did learn that it was sometimes better not to mention his name."

Maroon at first didn't even know Scolnick's real name. Sanford had introduced the fat man to him as Sylvan Harry. Maroon had a reputation as a talented salesman and Scolnick offered him a 20% piece of the action to join Golden Book, Maroon, however, did not realize the operation would be under Scolnick's control. "The thing that turned the tide for me," he says today, "was when I found out that he was calling the shots."

Maroon elaims he left Golden Book despite the fact that Scolnick still owes him money for expenses that came out of his own pocket while selling publishee prospects and, in fact, has a written agreement acknowledging the debt, "Of course," he admits, "it's about as good as the paper it's written on. I just consider myself quite fortunate to be able to get out of that situation."

Joe Spinelli's awakening didn't come until later. Out on the road for months trying to sell publishing areas, he couldn't keep abreast of the fat man's activities back in Cherry Hill. Working without a salary and taking expenses out of the commissions he was able to squeeze back from Scolnick from the sales he made, Spinelli was struggling along with promises that the financial tide would turn any day. He became suspicious, however, when he learned that Scolnick had not been making the monthly payments on his car or sending support checks to his wife, as he had promised he would. That's what prompted him to tape record a telephone call he made to Scolnick from Florida one day late last February. It is significant in that Scolnick reveals not only the financial state of the company but his absolute control over it--information quite contrary to what was being promulgated in its Dun & Bradstreet report at that very time:

"Syl?"

"Ya, how ya doin', Joe?"

"How ya been?"

"Oh, so so. What's new?"

"I wanted to ask a couple questions. Now follow me carefully, Syl, because I'm . . . I'm a little upset."

"If you were up here, loc, what would I tell you? I would sit you down, I'd say 'Here, Joe, take $50 or $100, if that's what you need. But I don't have it. foe, it's just not here. I'm telling you I'm just trying to get cleaned up. I got a problem I just straightened out with the Bell Tel with these big phone bills. I had over $3,000 in phone bills, Joe, that they were gonna close down the phone. Joe, all the shit had to be straightened out, and now we're on the brink of everything, and everything is getting right, and now, now you're gonna start gettin' touch-and-go with me?"

"Touch-and-go, Syl? It's eight months that I've lived like an animal with no money, no place to live . . ."

"Joe, Joe, you haven't lived any different than I have, and I got a place for you to live, Joe. I've got a place for you here. I've made arrangements See, I think about you, you son-of-abuch, But you don't think about me."

"I don't think about you?"

"No, now listen, I've made arrangements and I've taken Marvin's apartment. When you come up, you got his apartment in the Northgate, with all the furniture. I got everything set up for you, a nice place to live, fully furnished. I mean, what else do you want me to do? Do you know that the company is taking all that tariff for you, all the furniture, and you got a nice place to five. Now, I can't do more than that for you, Joe. I think of you every time that I can, but there is no money available now. But I told you, the first piece that comes in, I positively will cut you something and send it down right away so you have money in your pocker. O.K., Joe?"

"How are we fixed financially?"

"I just told you, I think we got about 80 some dollars."

"1...1. . I don't have a dime on me, Syl."

"I'll tell you what I'll do. I'll cut you a few dollars. I'll cut you a few dollars out today . . ."

"We're so flat broke, do you know what we ate last night? Rice."

"Well, now listen, foe. You're with rne. You understand?"

"Yeah."

"Now I have to worry about you, and if you're sick, I'm 'sick, And if you're short. I'm short. But Joe, I have to worry about Joe, because you're my man. You understand? Now, what I will do is I'll cut some for Dan, when the check comes in too. You know, like to cover his expenses for handling you and the trailer and all. You know, like a fifty dollar bill, a hundred dollars or so, you know what I mean?"

"Yeah."

"But, Ioc. I can't do any better than that, Joe. You understand? But as soon as it's here, Joe, you'll have it."

"All right."

"All right, now just hold on tight and try and generate some ad money down here, you know what I mean, and you know, give us the boost, and try and grab a publishee."

"Well, I'm gonna. We'll grab a publishee, but out of that I need the three car payments."

"All right, don't worry, I will, I'll take care of it. O.K., babe?"

"O.K."

"And don't let's argue. Listen, Ronnie and Jim and all that other bullshit, and everything else, that's secondary. You understand, Joe? You understand what I'm saying to you?"

"Yesh."

"All right, keep it tight, and listen, call me, just to say hello,"

Upon his return from the road, Spinelli made numerous attempts to find out what was going on, to get the structure of the company finalized and to get his portion of the stock that Scolnick had promised to him. Scolnick kept throwing him bones to pacify him. He gave him Mary Abrams' former apartment and furniture in the Northgate, a Camden high-rise, and kept trying to stall him. Spinelli eventually gave up in disgust, had a showdown with Scolnick and walked away to start a competing operation in Philadelphia, based again on his original concept.

When Philadelphia Magazine began its investigation of Sylvan Scolnick's involvement with Golden Book, Spinelli was contacted and asked to cooperate. The fat man immediately panicked. He dropped word in the district attorney's office that Spinelli was going to frame him, that he was going to plant dope on him and set him up. He called the U.S. attorney's office in Philadelphia and complained that Philadelphia Magazine was involved in a conspiracy to put him back in jail. He hired a former Philadelphia detective to take depositions from a jilted girlfriend of Spinelli's. He had a criminal complaint filed by Mary Abrams against Spinelli for taking the furniture out of the Northgate apartment. (The apartment and furniture which Scolnick said he was giving to Spinelli in that telephone conversation from Florida were actually in Mary Abrams' name, although paid for by Golden Book Inc. Spinelli was never told that and, when he quit Golden Book and moved out of the apartment, he gave the furniture to a salesmon of his named Phil-Tannenbaum. Shortly after Philadelphia Magazine contacted Spinelli, Tannenbanm was arrested on a private warrant for receiving stolen goods, Scolnick denied he had anything to do with it, but Kimball and Sanford showed up at Tannenhaum's arraignment and offered to drop the charge if Tannenbaum would help them build a case against Spinelli,)

Sylvan Scolnick is frantically attempting to build a defense against these revelations of his association with Golden Book. He reportedly has had several warrants sworn against Spinelli, charging him with a variety of crimes and frauds. He called lack Shapiro and asked him to cooperate against Spinelli, promising him the finder's fee which he owed him in return. When he learned, however, that Shapiro was also talking to Philadelphia Magazine, he had him arrested for attempted blackmail. (Shapiro will prohably sue for false arrest based on recorded conversations of Scolnick inviting him to his house and promising to pay him what he owed him.)

Through it all, of course, Sylvan Scolnick is denying any significant affiliation with Golden Book. Significantly, however, when U.S. Attorney in Newark, Herbert J. Stern, now cracking down hard on organized racketeering in Jersey, subpoenaed Golden Book's records recently, Scolnick immediately hired himself a top-notch criminal lawyer from Jersey

City, of all places.

Scolnick is obviously very concerned. The lawyer he hired is named Ray/Brown and he has represented the highest echelon of Jersey's Mañoso. Scolnick has told friends that, if necessary, he will make a deal with the U.S. Attorney to prevent his pressing the Golden Book matter. Scolnick says he could give the U.S. Attorney plenty of information about other big racketeers in South Jersey and he is willing to deal. What he is not willing to do is go back to jail. Above all else, he has said, he does not want to go back to jail.

Suddenly Sylvan Scolnick seems to have remembered that jail is a very special helf for a far man **

PROTECTING YOUR ENVIRONMENT

We are witnessing, with interest and approval, ane of the less dramatic, but more important autgrowths of the ecology movement. The federal government is now considering legislation which will, for the first time, coordinate all activities governing the sale, use and distribution of pesticides. Probably the autstanding feature of the proposed bill is to classify pesticides in two ways: general use pesticides which will be made available to all, and restricted use pesticides which will be provided only to those evincing prior knowledge as to competency and responsibility.

We applaud the government's attitude in this area. Proper legislation can prevent needless problems resulting from the misuse or over use of potentially harmful posticides by unqualified people. Equally important, it will hold our industry accountable to maintain proper standards. We are professionals. We endorse any action which will bring a greater degree of professionalism to our industry and which will provide the public with the protection it deserves; the protection that we have been providing for nearly one half century.

OFFICHEL FORM NO. 13 MAY 1883 EDITION, Fir. Belmont UNITED STATES GO lemorandum TO Director, FBI DATE: b6 b7C SAC, Philadelphia (80-100) i. Enes Miss Gandy ... PHILADELPHIA POLICE DEPARTMENT INFORMATION CONCERNING 1 1 The January 1965 issue of the "Greater Philadelphia Magazine" carried an editorial in which the editor, D. HERBERT LIPSON, stated that the magazine was publishing "an un-pleasant story" regarding Mayor JAMES H. J. FATE, Philadelphia. "One of the things we have felt uneasiest about of late is the quality of administration the city has been getting. One of the most serious questions in our mind was why the Mayor of Philadelphia seemed to be acting more like a Ward Leader than a Mayor. Why for instance was he meddling in the day-to-day affairs of the Police Department. Why did he feel it necessary to surround himself with a squad of armed body guards around the clock. What was going on in the ward he so insistently sought to keep political control of." The article is entitled, "Report From the 43rd Ward" by GAETON FONZI, a very capable reporter on the "Greater Philadelphia Magazine" staff. In the article mention is made of the fact that Deputy Commissioner EDWARD J. BELL (NA), is apparently a political protege of Mayor TATE's. There is no mention or indication of unethical or questionable conduct on the part of Deputy Commissioner BELL. - Bureau (Enc. 140105URE - Philadelphia 760-100) --REC-9 62b7C WVM: EKM (3)Buy U.S. Savings Bonds Regularly on the Payroll Savings Plan

On the sixth page of the enclosed nine page article mention is made of a high police official who was influenced in making transfers by Mayor TATE who at that time was President of Council. The influence was brought to bear because of his domestic troubles at that time. This official was former Police Commissioner THOMAS J. GIBBONS.

The enclosed copy is forwarded for the Bureau's advice.

REPORT FROM

It was early yet and there were still about a half dozen empty stools around the main bar at the Randolph Social Club, which means that it was not yet two o'clock in the morning and there were only about 150 people in the place because the bar is about as long as a football-field, "These guys with you?" a little beady-eyed character with sunken cheeks standing in the doorway was asking a kid by the name of the Donk who had just walked in with these two guys. The little guy knew the Donk and did not have to ask to see his membership card but he said the Donk. "I mean do you know them good, can you trust them?" asked the little guy. "Yeah, sure," said the Donk. "You remember Moochie? This is his son Sam. The other guy's an old pal," The little guy glanced over to Tommy the Boot who was standing back by the coat-check counter. The Boot did not give him the red light so he said OK. The three new-comers strolled down the front of the bar and grabbed a few of the empty stools. "Whatayn drinkin'?" asked Pete the Greek, one of the Boot's bartenders and musclemen. The guys ordered their drinks. "Where's the action?" asked the Donk. "Wait a half hour," said the Greek. "You won't be able to move there'll be so much action."

The Randolph Social Club does not look like a place where you would expect the action to be. From the outside it's damn near inconspicuous; snuggled between a couple of plain-looking buildings on Eric Avenue near 5th Street, it has a flat stucco front with a little cubicle of an entranceway sticking out across the sidewalk. Inside there are two bars, the big one that stretches the length of the place and a small square one to the right of the entrance. Facing the center of the main bar is a small bandstand with a dance area about the size of a pizza pie in front of it. Rows of tables and chairs reach out from both sides of it. The place is dimly lit with those purple passion bulbs that most joints like that have to give them the type of atmosphere the people who go to them feel at home in. There are broads with bikinis painted on all the walls. Come to think of it, maybe it does look like a place where you would expect the action.

In the 43rd ward, the Randolph Social Club is the action. By 2:30 one Saturday morning last month the joint was jumping. There must have been close to a thousand people in the place and if you wanted a drink you had to reach through three guys and two chicks to grab it. The dance floor was packed with bodies writhing to the blare of a mad combo. The guys were either young and tough looking or middle-aged and tough looking. The girls came in all sizes, shapes and ages, from about 19 on up, with wild hair and tight clothes. There were a few waitresses in white smocks who dropped in for a drink on their way from work and a few hookers with low-slung dresses who dropped in with their Johns on the way to work.

"I don't know why the hell you wanted to come here for," Sam was saying to his old pal, "This place is nothing but young punks and tough guys."

"Who you calling punks," says the Donk. "Some of these guys are my best friends. I been to jail with some of these

"You telling me," says Sam. "I seen every gambler and crook I know in the neighborhood. Gooney over there just got out of a Federal pen on a counterfeiting charge and that guy Clancy there is one of the biggest burglars in town. And you could just about pick up any broad you want here, they're all cheaters. Sure, even those young ones, they're married and out running around. This place has got everything, even strip shows here sometimes. And a poolroom and card games upstairs."

By 3 o'clock, the legal closing time for private clubs, the place looks like it has also got the whole 43rd ward population inside, but it mustn't because they are still pouring in the door. The booze is flowing like water and the scene is a smoke-blurred mass of carousing revelers. It goes on to about a quarter to four in the morning when the bartenders start yelling last call, Drinks keep getting poured to 4 o'clock. By this time a red car has pulled up and double-parked in front of the place and a line of waiting cabs stretches out behind it all the way to 5th Street. The cops come in and gab with the Boot. At about 4:15 the lights are flashed off and on and the place begins emptying out. By 4:30 the Boot himself is going around clapping his, hands and yelling that it is time to close up.

"I wonder why they are kicking us out so early tonight," says the Donk. "I've staggered out of this place some mornings in daylight. Maybe the man at City Hall is worried about something."

"You mean Tate?" asks Sam's old pal.

"Sure. Him and the Boot are old friends. Whatever he says goes in the 43rd ward. Man, don't you know where you're at? You're in Tate's territory!"

This is the story of Tate's territory, the 43rd ward. This is the story of a ward leader by the name of James H. J. Tate and how he runs the ward and some of the things that are going on up there.

THE FACT THAT James H. J. Tate is the ward leader of the 43rd ward and a committeeman of its 28th division would not be quite as significant if James H. J. Tate were not the mayor of Philadelphia. It makes a difference. It makes a difference because there is an indication that certain conditions existing in the ward bear a relationship to it. It makes a difference because the gradual but irrefutable, change in the methods and policles as well as the tone and temper of the administration of the city itself can be traced directly to it. And it makes a difference because the very nature—his strength and his weaknesses as well as his volcanic personality—of the man currently responsible for the destiny of this complex metropolis can only be fathomed with that fact in mind. The methods and techniques of a ward leader are based on certain specific goals which are the measure of success in his job. He must develop the associations and allegiances necessary for the accomplishment of that job if he is to function as a political power in his domain. His whole attitude and direction are dictated not only by a consensus of what his constituents in general think is best for their ward but also by the desires and needs of those individuals who are at the core of his power structure, his own workers and financial contributors. Ideals aside, the nature of the political system demands that a ward leader give primary consideration to the latter if he is at all interested in selfperpetuation. Most ward leaders are men of limited vision and ambition. They've achieved a post of adequate status in the political hierarchy-ward leaders are, after all, members of their party's City Committee. They are satisfied just to endure. James H. J. Tate, ward leader of the 43rd ward, has more than just endured.

THE PHYSICAL CHARACTERISTICS of the 43rd ward are the most clearly definable, since its boundaries cut across neighborhoods and ethnic enclaves. Roughly funnel-shaped, it sits atop north-central Philadelphia at Lehigh Avenue, a wide thoroughfare of commercial establishments and big, flat-faced apartment houses which were once stately homes. Its eastern border runs straight up Fifth Street from Lehigh to Wingohocking, the northern boundary of the ward. Its western border is Germantown Avenue, cobble-stoned and trolley-tracked, which slants down from around the Reading's Wayne Junction station to Lehigh, cutting across Broad Street at Eric Avenue, Compared with the city's 59. other wards, it is middling in size, with 22 encompassing a larger area than its 1.461 square miles and 23 having more than its 42,000 population.

The Schuylkill Expressway extension slices through the northwest section of the ward and emerges on Roosevelt Boulevard just north of Hunting Park, a sprawling green area with picnic groves and a swimming pool for the 43rd's juvenile inhabitants, From a point on the Expressway where it rises to cross over Germantown Avenue, the 43rd ward is a dull vista, strips of flat row-home roofs and squat manufacturing plants with smoke-belching soot-crusted chimneys, narrow streets and tight alleyways. The row homes have porches, almost all painted a monotonous brown, or are stat-faced with two or three short marble steps at the front door. It is a neighborhood of small grocery stores, luncheonettes and corner taprooms.

The 43rd takes in parts of Germantown, Nicetown and Tioga. It was once predominantly German but is now an amalgamation of ethnic neighborhoods. There is a heavy Italian section in its eastern divisions; Poles, Slovaks, Ukralnians, Lithuanians in the Nicetown section; Negro areas along parts of Germantown Avenue and in the southwest corner; and a generous sprinkling of Irish throughout. There are no new homes in the area and while many of the older ones are on the verge of decay, most are generally well kept. Economically, the families in the ward can be classified from lower middle to middle class, rarely higher. It is a ward where the men come home at night tired from a hard day's work and like to drop in the neighborhood saloon for a beer and sit down with the boys on the weekend for a card game and occasionally put a couple of bucks on a horse on a hot tip.

James H. J. Tate was born 54 years ago. in the 43rd ward. He has never left it. The house in which he was raised on Delhi near Eria is less than a dozen blocks from his present home on 7th Street near Lycoming. He attended St. Stephen's parochial school on Broad and Butler and got his first job as a bookkeeper with a lock maker on 11th and Allegheny. He and his three younger brothers ran one of the largest paper routes in the area. He played baseball and basketball for one of the local clubs. Jim Tate is a neighborhood boy all the way.

It takes a neighborhood boy-to get ahead in ward politics. Young Tate, the son of a Navy Yard worker, was wellknown and liked. Everybody knew he was a go-getter. While working for $15 a week during the day, he had gone to evening high school and, later, to a business school and Temple Law School. A boy from the 43rd ward who dld that sort of stuff was sure to get talked about in the neighborhood. It was no wonder that old John Haney, a saloonkeeper who was the Democratic ward boss at the time, got the idea that Jim Tate would be a good candidate for committeeman in his division. Tate was 27 then and clerking for Montgomery & McCracken, a big law firm in town. (He was never to finish up his law credits but Temple finally gave him an honorary law degree in 1960.) Of course Tate had always voted Republican, but that didn't bother Haney who was a former Republican himself. Haney talked him into becoming a Democratic committeeman in the ward's 28th division. Jim Tate still holds that job.

ate turned out to be a hotsbot committeeman. It wasn't long before he was running up and down his blocks, knocking on doors, talking to people he knew, telling them to come out and vote for his party. He learned a lot as a committeeman. He learned that very few people will votethe way you want them to vote because they believe in the same principles as your party. They will vote the way you want them to vote if they know you and like you, if they know your family or relatives or if you have done them a favor. The Tate family was well known in the neighborhood' and young Tote did such a good job in his division that in 1940 ward boss Haney slated him for the State House of Representatives. He got in on Roosevelt's coat-tails. (Running for Congress that year was another hotshot committeeman from the 43rd ward, Frank Smith, who later, having lost out in grabbing control of the 43rd, moved to another ward and eventually stepped up to his present post as Democratic City Committee chairman.)

Jim Tate was in control of the 43rd ward even before he became ward leader in 1946. Hancy was in his 80's and had gradually turned over more and more of the ward's operation to his young protege. Besides, Tate had met and became good friends with an up-and-coming ward leader from the neighboring 33rd by the name of Bill Green. By 1941 Tate found himself working downtown in Democratic City Committee headquarters as its executive secretary and assistant to party treasurer Jim Clark. This, together with his seat in the house (which he was to hold for three terms), gave him enough connections to begin to establish a power base, through favots done and jobs obtained, back in the ward.

election, with the Republicans having 7000 more registered voters, Tate took his own house seat by close to 2000 votes and swing the ward to Democratic candidates for the State Senate, Congress and U. S. Senate by an average of 1500 votes. In 1943, Republican Barney Samuel swept Philadelphia's mayoralty contest: Tate's ward went Democratic by 53 votes, despite the fact that there were 8000 more registered Republicans. In facty the Democrats didn't get an edge in registrations in the 43rd until the middle of the 50's, but no Republican for state or local office has carried the ward since 1947.

Much of Tate's tightening grip on the ward bore a direct relation to his rise in the city's political hierarchy. As Jim Clark's man at City Committee headquarters, he wielded an influence among other ward leaders that was beyond his official position as just another member of City Committee. Besides, they knew he had developed close associations with Clark and Green and John B. Kelly, key party powers. Jim Tate was one of "the boys," the professional politicians upon whom the front-line reformers like Joe Clark and Dick Dilworth had to depend for basic electoral support.

Tate's star rose. In 1951 he was elected to City Council from the 7th District, which encompasses the 33rd, 37th, 38th and 43rd wards. In 1955 he was elected president of City Council and in February, 1962, when Dilworth stepped down to run for governor. Tate was made acting mayor.

Tate didn't power his way into any of these jobs. He was put into these key slots because the Democratic party bosses, Jim Clark and Bill Green, had the utmost faith in his-loyalty and organization allegiance. In fact, when a top Democratic politico later went to Green and questioned the wisdom of Green's having given the nod to Tate to run for mayor on his own in view of the fact that the politico thought that Tate was displaying an increasing arrogance with every little bit of additional power he acquired, Green told him bluntly, "Don't worry about Jim. I can handle him."

hat is especially significant is that with every step Tate climbed up the ladder of political status, his ward organization back in the 43rd became more entrenched and his grip on that organization grew stronger. To try ito fathom the complex psychological factors behind the obvious necessity of remaining an important cog in the neighborhood political structure while the reins of government of a mighty metropolis is in his hands is not a simple matter. He is a boy from a neighborhood of common, hard-working people who made good, and perhaps it's natural that there is a certain kind of pride derived from what might be called environmental heritage not gotten elsewhere. At any rate, there is no doubt that Tate put every position of influence he attained to use as a ward leader.

It is not an easy thing to be a good ward leader. It is more than a full-time job. The telephone at home rings alt hours of the day and night, calls from constituents and committeemen, usually wanting something. Someone wants a ticket fixed, a copy of the charge from a magistrate, tickers for the Mummers Parade, a job as a fireman, a stop sign on the corner, a zoning variance to operate a beauty parlor, a son taken out of jail. Then there is the constant task of keeping committeemen happy and on their toes, watching for moving vans in the neighborhood, getting people registered, having registrations changed, continued on page 116

Sales of the sales

Report from the 43rd Ward

checking on addresses and youngsters coming of age. In fact, one of the keys to a ward leader's success are committeemen who are loyal and bard-working. One of the principal means ward leaders use to keep committeemen loyal and hard-working is by getting them jobs dependent upon political sponsorship. This was Tate's wedge in the early days of his leadership. With the Republicans hoarding the patronage pie in Philadelphia, Tate used his association with Demo bigwigs to grab as many state and federal jobs that were around as he could. When the Democrats took over City Hall, constituents flocked to offer their loyalty. A number of loyal Republican committeemen became loyal Democratic committeemen.

By himself, however, a committeeman is a relatively powerless individual, though many ward leaders will work through their committeemen in serving their constituents. In the 43rd ward, Jim Tate was always the man to see. "I remember him sitting up in his house all hours of the night listening to everybody's trouble," recalls a former aide. "It was like he was hearing confessions. And the answer was always, 'I'll take care of it.' And most of the time he did."

First call. Whatever his job, the constituents of the 43rd ward always came first in Jim Tate's mind. "I remember when I first took over my department and Tate was president of City Council," says a former City Commissioner who served under Dilworth, "he came to me and told me frankly that he wanted to establish good relations with me because he would be coming to me to ask me to do favors for voters in his ward. Then when he became acting mayor, he even called me at home to complain that one of my inspectors had been bothering one of his voters in the ward."

The bulk of a ward leader's time is devoted to doing favors for his voters. Unfortunately, whenever a voter seeks out his ward leader he usually wants something which he cannot get expeditiously through ordinary channels. Most of the time he is in trouble. Voters who get in trouble most often are those who derive their livelihoods from those activities outside the law. The fact is they are still voters, and often well-heeled ones at that. Come election time, if there is one thing that has as great an influence on the outcome as loyal, hard-working commit-teernow, it is the ability of the political organization to distribute funds to its workers. Given the racketeer's desire to conduct his business of catering to illicit human appetites in an atmosphere of reasonable security, there is bound to be a relationship between the rackets and politica. And it follows, that the branches of government service where politicians with racket associations would most like to have their influence felt are the law enforcement agencies.

James Tate has always been finicky about allusions to his association with racketeers in the 43rd ward. In February of 1961, when Greater Phila-DELPHIA MAGAZINE published an article on gambling in Philadelphia and referred to a section of the city as "Tate's territory," the then-City Council president went to great pains to explain, over a luncheon with the publisher, that the description had certain inadvertant implications which might damage his reputation. After all, he was a respected member of the community, a family man, a high city official, a member of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick, the Loyal Order of Moose, the Pennsylvania Society, the Hunting Park Recreation Advisory Council, St. Veronica's Church and its Good Friday Observance Committee.

Yet, there is a heavy racket element in the ward and there is no indication that Tate has ever done anything to antagonize it. In fact, it was Tate who insisted, soon after he became ward leader, that a magistrate come from his ward. He picked an old-time ward loyalist, James J. Powers, Sr., who had been in the county commissioners' office as chief of the department of weights and measures, a bureau with a heritage that is not exactly untainted. (Powers, now about 75, was picked by Tale to run for the 43rd's State House seat in 1962 after an old pal, Tom McCormack, who had held it since 1952, stepped down, thinking he had Tate's support for City Council. After Powers was slated, Tate dumped McCormack.)

Now it may be inevitable, growing up in a neighborhood like the 43rd ward, that certain friendships and associations may develop over the years with local characters who have not been fortunate enough to avoid police contact. It can probably be said that a good many law-abiding people in the 43rd ward know someone who is not law-abiding. It is a matter of choice whether or not friendships and associations develop. A politician's choice, however, may be tempered by special considerations. A racketeer's

Dear Applicant:

In considering your (application for employment with, contractual agreement with, or performance of services for) the House Select Committee on Assassinations (HSA), the Committee must make a determination as to your suitability for employment, your trust-worthiness for clearance for access to classified information, or both. The HSA has asked the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) to conduct appropriate background investigations on prospective applicants and contractors. To assist the FBI in conducting its investigation of your background, please provide the HSA with the information required on the enclosed forms which will be provided to the FBI....

The principal use of this information will be to conduct an investigation, the results of which will be used to evaluate your suitability and trustworthiness for clearance for access to classified information. Furnishing this information is voluntary; however, if you decline to provide all or part of this information, we may be unable to consider your (application or contractual agreement). Willfully making a false statement or concealing a material fact may constitute a violation of Section 1001, Title 18 of the United States Code.

If you provide any information which indicates a violation of law, whether civil. criminal or regulatory in nature, or if such information is developed in the course of the background investigation, it will be referred to the appropriate Federal, state. local or foreign agency.

Information gathered shall be retained by the FBI in accord with the provisions of the FBI Records Retention Plan. However, information obtained during background investigations conducted pursuant to this agreement will not be disseminated outside the FBI except when necessary to fulfill obligations imposed by law, FBI regulation or presidential directive or executive order. When a request is received from a Federal agency for background information concerning a current employee or contractor of the HSA, if the individual concerned has given written consent authorizing the HSA to be notified, the FBI will notify the HSA of the request for background information, except where the request concerns the individual's employment application to the agency requesting the background information. Notification by the FBI to the HSA will not extend to a criminal or national security investigation until it is determined that notification would not impede or compromise the investigation. The FBI investigation will include the collection and use of relevant information in the files of other Federal agencies.

Sincerely,
